WHEN A GIRL MARRIES A New Serial of Young Married Life

By ANN LISLE.

CHAPTER XI.

Suddenly I knew that this wasn't so.
I had married Jim after a whirlwind courtship—married him without knowing him. I didn't even know him now! The war had been his life for over three years, and I was asking him to forget his very life and live in a lotus land of love.

One minute I loathed myself. The next I resented this strange woman, with her beautiful clothes, her assured manner, her compelling eyes and the little air of reserve and mystery that hung about her. She talked of everything fearlessly and without questioning whether or not she was intruding—she talked freely of everything but herself.

"Perhaps you mean to be kind," I said slowly, "but do you think you need to tell me what a wife and husband should talk about? Isn't it merciful to let Jim forget the war for a while?"

It was abominable of me, but she didn't get angry. She only looked at me with an expression that seemed almost pitying.

"Mrs. Jimmie, there are some things you will need to understand if you're going to be happy with your husband.
He was a soldier for three years. The war is in his blood. Let me tell you—"

She leaned forward earnestly. I felt almost frightened as she exclaimed:

"Whether Jim likes it or not, I'm going to tell you some of the things you need to understand. I have seen those boys—"

Then Jim's clear whistle rang over the lawn and I saw him whirling the little car about and driving down the road toward the summer house. A sudden feeling of relief made me almost dizzy. I wanted to know—yet I feared what Betty Bryce had been ready to say—the things Jim's voice stopped.

"I know you girls would hit it on when you got to know each other. What have you been telling little Anne, Betty?"

Betty Bryce lifted her eyes to his with cool insolence.

"We've been talking about the things women usually talk about—men and things," she said lightly.

And never once on our trip did it occur to me to explain to Jim that what she had said was not the truth—that there should be a secret between Betty Bryce and me.

My boy and I spent a wonderful afternoon at the great aviation field. We were happy together, but even in my wonder at the great planes which rose whirling above us, like giant birds, I couldn't forget the warning in Betty Bryce's eyes—in her tense voice. What was it she felt that I had such grave need of knowing? Copyright, 1920.

PUSS IN BOOTS JR.

By DAVID CORY.

CHAPTER XI.
Well, just as Puss Junior was placing his tie the diamond pin, the last story, you remember, a gruff voice called out:

"I am a robber fierce and bold,
And I love to steal another man's gold.
So give me that beautiful diamond pin Or I'll put you in prison till you grow thin."

Till you grow thin as a wisp of hay, So hand me that diamond pin, I say."

But, do you think Puss Junior handed that robber the beautiful diamond pin?
No, siree, he didn't. Instead he drew his sword and said fiercely:

"I am the son of Puss in Boots, So beware of my sword so bright.
Be off or I'll run you through and through."

For I'm not afraid to fight."

And would you believe it, that robber turned and fled, he was so frightened, and this made the little owl laugh so loud that he lost his voice and couldn't say a word for a week. And the little dwarf, who had closed the cave door and locked it, came out and said:

"You are indeed a brave cat. Stay with me and protect my treasures and I will give you half."

But Puss Junior replied that he must seek his fortune in another way, for, said he: "I must win my treasure and not have it given me." Which is the right way, after all, for who wants to be beholden to any man? So, off went little Puss Junior to seek more adventures, leaving the dwarf and the little owl in the shady woods.

And by and by he came to a great bridge that crossed a mighty river, and the toll man wouldn't let him pass at first, for he didn't know who he was, but when Puss told him he lifted the gates and let him through.

Now, just as our little traveler reached the middle of the bridge, when should he meet but Sir Launcelot of the Lake.

"Miss Muffet Was Very Happy as They Jogged Along."

LEGION OFFICERS IN ROLE OF CUPID

Young Couple Wishing to Be Married Gets Quick Help.

"Service for ex-service men" is the slogan at national headquarters of the American Legion in this city.

Accordingly, when Legionnaire John C. Miller of Los Angeles called at the office of the national adjutant yesterday morning with him Miss Ruth Frances Hood of Franciscville, Ind., and said he wanted witnesses for their marriage, Lemuel Bolles produced the witnesses in the persons of his secretary, Miss Flor May Wingfield of New York, and Percy R. Mosen of Minneapolis of the organization division.

National Adjutant Bolles further accepted the invitation of the couple and he and Miss Rutherford, an Indianapolis nurse, also from Franciscville, were the only invited guests at the wedding, which took place at the Second Presbyterian church.

Rev. L. A. Harriman performed the ceremony.

The party was later guests of Mr. and Mrs. Miller at a dinner at Hotel English, after which the young couple left for Pittsburgh.
