CHAPTER XIV.

"Jim understands! Jim understands!"

My heart is singing this over and over again. Yesterday was a perfect day. A day of golden happiness. But I don't want to hold Mrs. Baer at food-tide. I am ready for what may come—ready to face things with my man.

Theoretically I am packing—saying goodby to the chaise-longue room of our first, shy dreams together. But actually I am facing out toward life with open arms—ready to meet what comes, be it good or ill. For Jim understands.

It was the last day of our honeymoon week. We ran away from the world and its people. We picnicked on the banks of a tiny stream at noon and rested in the shade of fragrant pine and balsam.

We had ham and bread and butter and raspberries and thick cream in a farmhouse at 7 o'clock and then drove into the heart of the sunset and got lost on a little wandering road that ribboned its way along the sound and in and out of fields of baby wheat and through a grove of tall trees, and then came build-up at last out on the highway—the black satin straight road itself.

Soon came darkness and the moon—a stolen kiss in the shadow of a high hedge—beats beating high with love and youth.

And then it happened. I met the thing of which I have been in mortal terror all my life!

We were driving home between high hedges of that green and white wild honeysuckle that they call Marlene's Delight down Gloucester way—they say the fishermen scent it far at sea and know they're coming home—and I begged Jim to stop the car so I could breathe in the fragrance of those hedges.

Jim got out and cut great sprays of the honeysuckle and stowed them in the folded top of the car behind us. Just as we were driving on again through the quiet darkness I spied on the shoulder of his uniform an ugly burr. I leaned over and plucked it with my left hand.

The burr clung to my middle finger—clung and stuck. I tried to loosen it with my other hand, but as I touched it—and even before I felt the plushy velvet so unlike a burr, it was on Jim's shoulder again and he was knocking it off with his gauntlet.

"Did the bee sting you?" he asked tenderly. "We'll drive right to the near-

PUSS IN BOOTS JR.

By DAVID CORY.

CHAPTER XIV.

After a visit of a week or more at the Court of King Arthur, Puss Junior said goodby and continued on his way. For he was desirous of meeting with more adventure. Well, he trudged merrily along, for it was a beautiful, bright day and he was feeling very hale.

He was this little traveler, and by and by he came to an old farm. And just as he turned the corner of the barn he heard the weathercock on the roof sing this new Mother Goose melody:

"Puss Jr. and Piggie Porker Walking Down the Shady Lane.

Georgie Porgy, pudding and pie, Teased the piggies in the sty. When the mother pig came out, Georgie quickly turned about."

And he would have run into Puss Junior if our little traveler hadn't stepped to one side.

"Hello, who are you?" asked Georgie Porgy, staring at the red top boots of the little Puss Junior.

"A traveler who is thirsty," he replied. "Can you give me a cool drink of water?"

So Georgie Porgy led the way to the old well where the moss-covered buckets took turns in bringing up the water from the cool depths. And then he took the tin dipper and filled it and gave Puss a drink.

"I think your red-top boots are beautiful," said the little boy. "Where are you going?"

"Oh, I'm a traveler. I go where the winds blow."

And just then there came a loud squeaking from the sty, and Puss saw a small pig looking over the side of the pen.

"Why, it's Piggie Porker!" cried our little traveler, and he lifted the little pig over the fence.

"Oh, take me away," he cried. "Georgie Porgy teases me all the time. Now, this made Puss Junior very angry, for he was fond of Piggie Porker, and although it was a long time since he had rescued him from Tom the Piper's son, he hadn't forgotten him.

"Come with me," said Puss, and without another word he and the little pig left the farmyard and walked down the shady lane. And as they passed through the gate little Robin Red Breast looked down from his nest and sang:

"Goodby, Piggie Porker; a pleasant trip to you. Hope you meet Red Riding Hood and Little Boy in Blue. Tell them I've a little nest in the apple tree, Crowded full of little birds longing to be free. When their wings grow strong enough they shall fly away; Goodby Piggie Porker till we meet some day."

And then little Jenny Wren flew by, and a big darning needle, which is a kind of insect you know, only she doesn't know how to sew, and the Cow that Jumped Over the Moon, looked over the Old Snake Fence, and said, "Goodby, Piggie Porker, we all know you will be happy so long as you travel with Puss, Jr."

HOW TO JUDGE A WOMAN BY HER HAIR

There is real common sense in just noticing whether the hair is well kept to judge of a woman's neatness, or good taste. If you are one of the few who try to make the most of your hair, remember that it is not advisable to wash the hair with any cleanser made for all purposes, but always use some good shampoo. You can enjoy the very best by getting some canthox from your druggist, dissolve a teaspoonful in a cup of hot water. This makes a full cup of shampoo liquid, enough so it is easy to apply it to all the hair instead of just the top of the head. Dandruff, excess oil, and dirt are dissolved and entirely disappear. Your hair will be so fluffy that it will look much heavier than it is. Its luster and softness will also delight you, while the stimulated scalp gains the health which insures hair growth.—Advertisement.

To match any material, have druggist show you "Diamond Dye" Color Card.—Advertisement.

Laughing deep and hard and right from my heart. So this was all there was to a bee sting! An ugly prick. And all my life I had been haunted by a hideous fear of bees!—Copyright, 1920.
