LIFT OFF CORNS WITH FINGERS

Doesn't hurt a bit and costs only few cents

You'll laugh. Apply a few drops then lift sore, touchy corns right off. No pain. Yes, magic!

A few cents buys a tiny bottle of the magic Freezone at any drug store. Apply a few drops of Freezone upon a tender, aching corn or a callus. Instantly that troublesome corn or callus stops hurting, then shortly you lift it out, root and all, without any pain, soreness or irritation.

These little bottles of Freezone, contain just enough to rid the feet of every hard corn, soft corn, corn between the toes and the calluses on bottom of feet. So easy! So simple! Why wait? No humbug!—Advertisement.

PUSS IN BOOTS JR.

By DAVID CORY.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Well, I wouldn't have been able to tell you what would have happened to little Puss Junior if he had taken another gobletful of water from the fairy's spring, as I promised you in the last story, if I hadn't asked the little fairy last night, when the moon was shining.

And what she told me was that a second glass of water from her spring made a person grow so small that you couldn't see him, unless you had a magnifying glass. Now, wasn't it lucky that Puss Junior didn't take another drink? Well, I guess it was.

"Now," said the little fairy, "don't you climb up that mountain, for on the top lives a giant, whose name is Thunder-voice, and he'll scare you to death, and maybe deafen you."

"Never fear, my kind little fairy," answered our little hero. "I once met the Giant of the Beantalk, so why should I fear the Giant of the Mountain?" And he bowed to the Fairy of the Spring and started off.

And by and by he heard a dreadful noise. The mountain shook and trembled and the air rushed by like a hurricane, and the trees bent and the grasses shivered and great pieces of rock tumbled down the sides of the mountain.

"I guess old Thunder-voice is talking to himself," said our little hero, with a laugh. "Which shows he wasn't afraid, doesn't it?"

And then who should come in sight but the giant himself. And he was so tall and big that Puss Junior couldn't see the top of his head, and neither could the Giant, unless he looked in his wife's mirror.

"Where did you come from, kitten?" asked the dreadful big creature in a thunderous tone, which almost blew off Puss Junior's hat.

"I am Puss in Boots Junior, and you can't frighten me!"

"Rum, rum, dum, dum!" yelled the Giant, and the feather on our little pussy cat's hat blew off and drifted down the wind until it caught on a fir tree.

"How dare you speak to me like that! No one ever did before and live to tell the tale!"

And he rushed at Puss and tried to catch him, but Puss darted to one side and drew his sword, and when the Giant saw that he laughed again and said: "You are a brave little cat. Come to my castle and I promise no harm shall befall you."

So Puss went with him and when they entered the Giant's home a little gray dove flew out and alighted on his shoulder and cooed. And the big Giant stroked his pretty feathers so softly that Puss thought to himself: "This Giant can't be so very wicked, after all, if he loves that little bird."

And he wasn't the least bit afraid, but sat down on a chair while the Giant hung up his great cap on a wooden peg and wound the clock. And in the next story you shall hear more about Puss Junior at the Giant's castle.—Copyright, 1920.
