

MORE MURDERS BY BLUEBEARD TO COME OUT?

Doubt Fullness of Confession as Harvey Recalls His Ninth 'Wife' Victim.

'FLASHES' BRING TO MIND

LOS ANGELES, May 11.—"Bluebeard" Harvey, who is under life sentence for the murder of nine "wives" still has other victims.

Such was the opinion of investigators for the district attorney today, when they were astounded by the news that Harvey had admitted to the murder of a tenth "wife" named Robert L. Couts, who has been with "Bluebeard" since his arrest a month ago.

The "ninth wife," murdered and confessed to before "Bluebeard" life sentence had been transferred on the records of the court, was Mrs. M. A. Watt, a slayer said.

He married her in Winnipeg and murdered and buried her in Lake Coeur d'Alene, where another of his victims' bodies lies.

Reference by him to others and a mass of data found in his possession containing names of many women leaves in mystery what their fate might have been.

THE HAAGS AGAIN IN THE LIME LIGHT

Not for selling sugar at 37c a pound or potatoes at $1.25 a peck, and not for profiteering and not for selling liquor drugs.

During the flu epidemic in the fall and early winter of 1918 the Haag brothers of people in all parts of the world. It killed our soldiers in great numbers. In this city and neighboring towns and farms entire families were taken away by this terrible epidemic. Never in the history of the United States did we experience such a calamity.

In this city, Dr. Morgan of the board of health issued imperative orders that all employees of stores and all persons riding in street cars and in other public places must wear masks to prevent spread of the disease.

The disease killed the best physicians. In most instances it had a depressing and weakening effect on the heart and entire system, often being accompanied by acute bronchitis and pneumonia. It followed in a few days by a general collapse and death.

In conjunction with other remedial agents, many military as well as civilian doctors prescribed liquor as a quick and safe heart stimulant to be taken in connection with other remedial agents, and in most instances wonderful curative results would follow. During that time on account of the Indiana prohibition law being in force, there was very little whiskey in the state, even the Haag Drug Company had a very small supply, having filled only a few hundred prescriptions for liquor in the previous six months, in their seven stores.

The Indiana prohibition law being a new one on our statute books, the Haags, desirous of securing a correct interpretation of the law before importing liquors into the state for medicinal purposes, their attorneys and had other legal advice before they applied for state and federal permits to import liquors for medicinal use into the state; they filed their bonds and received Indiana Permit No. 1 and Federal Permit No. 25, thus securing the first state permit issued. These permits gave the Haag Drug Company the legal state and federal permits to import liquors into the state of Indiana to be used for medicinal purposes. The Haags made every effort to strictly comply with all the provisions of the state and federal law. Being aware that it was difficult to keep a strict surveillance over their stock of liquors if some were kept in each of their seven stores, they transferred to the Pennsylvania street store all the liquors they had in the other six Haag stores. In the Pennsylvania street store they kept their stock constantly under lock and key, and whenever any of the liquor was taken up stairs it was put in lock shelves in a locked cabinet and kept under lock and key. Each time one of the prescription clerks had a prescription he would take the key from the prescription case, unlock the door to the liquor cabinet, take the size bottle the prescription called for, number and file it the same as other prescriptions. To give an example of how sincere they were in obeying the law to the letter, even the managers and prescription clerks in the various stores were compelled to bring prescriptions for liquor when they had flu in their family. It is true they sold large quantities during the flu epidemic, but they have approximately ten thousand doctors' prescriptions as proof that the sales were made in good faith for medicinal use. If there were some prescriptions that were forgeries or that were not properly written it must be remembered that six of their registered prescription clerks were in service, others in their employ were sick with the flu and those on duty were practically working double time.

It was a slight never to be forgotten, the anxious, careworn expressions shown on the features of the customers, some of them imploring their prescription be filled first, as their mother or their child was dying and the doctor said the patient must have whiskey to stimulate the heart; others, who were equally as anxious to save those dear to them would strengthen their plea by mentioning that their home was in a nearby town and they had only fifteen minutes to make their trip to the Haag store. The only firm in central Indiana who had a state and federal permit, and consequently, the demand on them was overwhelming, which compelled them to order much of the liquor by express. And of all this liquor they did not, knowingly, sell or give away a single drop without a prescription, and they have every reason to believe that thousands of lives were saved and many patients relieved who suffered with asthma and other diseases.

The great crowds of satisfied customers trading in the Haag Drug Stores is ample proof that the masses of people of Indianapolis have the greatest confidence in the Haags, their honorable methods and the businesslike manner in which they conduct their business. This is the reason they sell the 25c Laxative Bromo Quinine Tablets for 16c, the $1.00 S. S. S. for 57c, the $1.00 Penogen for 52c, the $1.25 Pink Ham Vag. Compound for 75c, the $1.50 Fellows Comp. Syrup of Hypophosphites for $1.00, the 25c Lysol for 18c, and most everything else at reduced or cut price.—Advertisement.

The list is as near chronological as "Bluebeard's" memory of dates and investigation of the case by officials would permit.

The admission of slaying his "ninth wife" was made to "Couts" when the woman's body was "suddenly flashed through" Harvey's mind.

"I forgot it," the murderer explained.

The result of this sudden recollection of another addition to his long list of crimes which in date show nine murders, five missing women and twenty-one marriages is to cast doubt over the fullness of his alleged "complete" confession.

ONE GOOD PURPOSE The confession of Harvey served to establish his real identity.

He was first known by the name of Holden, which I received from my stepfather," Bluebeard said.

"They called me Dan, yet I think my name was Joseph."

"My real father's name, I learned later, was Gilliam. I guess my real name would have been Joseph Gilliam."

The high lights of the confession made public today by the district attorney's office take the murderer back over his early life and show him, until a few years ago when he began his monstrous crimes, to have been a traveling representative of the Consolidated Adjustment Company of Chicago, the St. Louis Rubber Stamp and Seal Company and in these and other middle western cities.

DIVORCED FROM FIRST WIFE.

His business affairs took him to all parts of the south, to Texas and Kansas, where in Coffeyville he made his first marriage to a "girl named Marie Hollingsworth" from whom he shortly afterward was divorced, he said.

His next marriage was to "Alice Freeman, daughter of C. E. Freeman of Los Angeles."

He deserted this wife, he said, when he was lured to the United States by fraud and had to leave, going to Canada.

His name in the marriage to Miss Freeman was Lawrence J. Holden. He skipped to keep from being prosecuted," was the way he phrased it in his confession.

It was after "skipping" from St. Louis and proceeding to Calgary, Canada, that he took the alias "James P. Watson."

After having outlined a number of bigamous marriages in Canada, he was asked:

"Now, did you ever have any desire to slay, with reference to these women?"

SLAYING ALL WITHIN REACH OF FIVE MILES.

"Well, I will tell you," he replied, "nearly all of these things, these killings, were done practically in a few months and during that time, to be frank with you, it seemed to me I felt these awful pulsations. I fought and fought it."

He was then asked if this did not refresh his mind as to the names of others he had made away with.

"The name of one of them flashed into my mind," he replied. "Her name was Anna M. Austin."

Pressed further to recall other murders, "Bluebeard" explained his forgetfulness by this reply:

"I don't remember any more of these things right now."

Questioned as to how he murdered Marie Austin of Calgary he said:

"It seems to me now that I hit her and put her down in the lake. At her funeral I remember simply putting the thing over."

"Bluebeard" is a slight man, underweight and ill-proportioned. He thinks he is 42 years old, but he does not actually know. He looks about that age.

His hands and arms are grotesquely long. They are never still.

He has cold gray eyes, not very wide apart. They are never drooped; never look direct. His nose is large, broad, well formed; forehead broad and high; hair light brown.

His mouth is the most distinguishable thing about him. It is like a Sioux Indian's, wide, flat and thin, save for the lower lip, which droops, showing his teeth.

He is about 5 feet 8 inches tall. He thinks he is a gentleman, despite his multi-murders and wants courteous treatment.
