

L. SAYRES &amp; Co.

JUNE marks the logical end of the spring selling season for silks and it is our habit to recognize this fact by a sale at reduced prices of all surplus at this time.

Not always, however, have we extended these reductions to involve what may be termed summer silks; this year we have.

Not a piece of silk in stock today carries its regular price, in fact, mark-downs are not only universal, but drastic in the extreme.

You can't buy any silk, plain or fancy, heavy or sheer, delicate in color or dark, that is not truly a bargain.

Silk Sale

Choose as you will, what you'll be asked to pay in this June event will be surprisingly little. Nothing has been reserved.

L. SAYRES &amp; Co.

MARKET conditions at this time are peculiarly fortunate for a cut-price sale of silks. A few weeks ago it wasn't a matter of selling, but of getting silks, which troubled us. Then it looked like the upward price trend would continue. But half way around the globe, in Japan, source of raw silk, the tension lightened; the New York market responded and several lines of silks not only ceased to advance, but fell a fraction in price.

So now we feel free to "go the limit" on a clearance, believing it possible to replace depleted stocks when needed.

We've done so—marked down unflinchingly every yard of silk in stock.
