SNOWBIRDS IN U. S. COURT TELL DOPE SECRETS

cotic conspirators and peddlers sat in the jury box and faced the court during this dramatic recital.

Occasionally the scene shifted to comedy, spontaneous and lively, but other witnesses recalled the tragedy of the drug traffic by their pitiful stories.

Blubber Hayes, known as "Bubbles," who was one of the confessed users of the drug and a peddler, testified that he had seen Harry Rogers turn money from morphine sales over to "Buster" Clark.

"Bubbles," how did you ever get to use dope?" asked Judge Anderson.

"Bubbles" rose very solemnly from his seat and said in a loud voice:

"Mister Judge, you seed it was like dis. I use this stuff 'bout dry up."

"Well, sir, it was back in nineteen hundred an' tin dat I got to lovin' a gal."

"Won't night dat gal of mine sed to me as she was done pullin' at de pipe, she sed to me, 'Babe, do you love ya baby?'"

"And I says to her, 'Uh-huh, baby.'"

AND SO SAMSON WENT TO RUIN.

"Den she done sed to me, 'Den un baby will take a shot of dis whu ya baby.'"

"And I sed, uh-huh," chooned Bubbles as he puckered up his lips and loudly said "Uh-huh" with a smack of his lips.

"And der I was, Mister Judge," confessed "Bubbles."

Even Judge Anderson was forced to laugh with everybody else in the courtroom.

"Bubbles" said he has quit the use of drugs and is now living the right kind of life.

"What is your occupation?" asked the court.

"I don't resigned dat job," asked "Bubbles."

Continuing, he said: "It's a classy singer and dancer, judge, at won't den tin theaters and I was done told to be thar tonight, judge."

Judge Anderson leaned forward and said: "Are you a good dancer, Bubbles?"

"Judge I kin dance any ole kind of a dance, for ya," said "Bubbles" with enthusiasm, but Judge Anderson did not seem to care for a demonstration.

RELEASED AFTER BEING "ARRANGED"

Haynes said he had been in jail several weeks waiting for trial and was released after he was "arranged" and pleaded guilty.

"Mr. District Attorney, I think that Bubbles has learned his lesson and has been in jail long enough," said Judge Anderson to District Attorney VanNuy, who agreed with the court.

"You are sentenced to a day in jail," said Judge Anderson. "Go back to your business and behave yourself."

"Lay off of that stuff," "Bubbles" made a dramatic exit from the courtroom, bowing very low and muttering his thanks to "de court."

Then the scene shifted to tragedy and Judge Anderson became very grave as Della Rogers, wife of Harry J. Rogers, a defendant in the case, took the stand.

Mrs. Rogers was dressed in black and she walked slowly to the witness stand to testify for the government.

A DAY FOR DRUG.

Slowly she told her story—she used morphine for ten years, that her husband had used the drug and that she spent as high as $20 a day for morphine and bought most of the dope from Lottie Clark.

She claimed she no longer uses the drug.

Stella Jackson, another confessed user of the drug, was called as a witness.

She was dressed in a black hat and a blue sailor dress. She had used the drug for four years and bought it from Harry Rogers, she testified.

Then May Finlayson, dressed in a large picture hat, which shielded her sunken eyes and cheeks from the gaze of the curious, was called upon.

She testified she used morphine for two years, but had stopped the habit one week ago.

She said she bought the morphine from Clark once and generally from Rogers, and usually got it in $2 lots about three times a day.

"Where did you get the money?" asked the court.

She hung her head.

District Attorney VanNuy said: "She has been in the habit of using morphine for ten years, that her husband had used the drug and that she spent as high as $20 a day for morphine and bought most of the dope from Lottie Clark."

was a part of the redlight life down in Terre Haute."

Harry Welch, who used to be a prize fighter and an oil salesman, also a defendant, who confessed, said he got his morphine from a Terre Haute drugist.

"Why isn't the drugist here?" demanded Judge Anderson.

The district attorney stated that an investigation is now under way.

"He ought to be here," said the court. Maurice Chase, a defendant, said he went to St. Louis, obtained money from Clark and brought morphine back with him to Terre Haute.

"DR. CHASE, HOURS 12 TO 12."

Chase admitted he had a back room in the former underworld saloon of "Buster" Clark's and that he had a sign which read: "Dr. Chase. Hours 12 to 12."

He admitted he sold there and had seen Harry Rogers turn money from morphine sales over to "Buster" Clark.

Maurice Chase was commonly known as "Cotton" Chase in Terre Haute.

Frank Dalley, known as "Bugs" Dalley, admitted selling dope for Chase when Chase was out of his shop and for this service he obtained a few "shots" of morphine for his own use.

Harry J. Rogers, a defendant, admitted Clark gave him money to go to St. Louis and obtain dope and that the dope was kept in a safe at Clark's saloon, only Clark and his wife having the keys.

YOUNG MAN TELLS OF DRUG'S CLUTCH.

One of the most pitiful recitals was told by John H. Castle, 26, who admitted using morphine "shot" for eight years.

"I began using a medicine which was made from morphine when they told me that I had a disease," confessed Castle, who was indicted as a peddler of dope.

"I used morphine for eight years."

"Why did you use it?" asked the court. Castle put his hands together in a hopeless attitude and said: "I couldn't get around unless I had a shot. I had to have it."

"I would get down and I couldn't get up unless I had it."

"I had to have it to even get about."

That was probably the most pitiful confession of what morphine can do to wreck the life of a young man.

Inspector H. W. Gwin, who aided in unearthing this gigantic narcotics traffic, said that St. Louis, Terre Haute and Toledo, O., were the three great dope centers in this country.

MILLIONAIRES CAUGHT IN DOPE NET.

He said a man named "Big Henry" was the ring leader of the trade at St. Louis and that Chase and Dalley had aided the government in breaking up the St. Louis gang, resulting in several millionaires being sent to prison from that city.

The inspector said an ounce of morphine cost the Terre Haute gang about $11 and that an ounce netted from $300 to $500 in sales.

He said he knew of an ounce of the "snow" (morphine) selling at $1,000 an ounce to a user of the dope.

He branded "Buster" Clark and his wife as the chief leaders in the traffic along with Frank E. McBarry, a brother-in-law of Clark, as another principal.

The inspector had several thousand dollars' worth of "snow" in a box which he introduced as evidence, obtained in raids in Terre Haute.

EASY WORK—EXORBITANT PROFITS.

He said the profits from the morphine trade were enormous and that it was "easy money," because it did not require much work.

Mr. VanNuy said "Buster" Clark has been a "political power" in Terre Haute for years and actually controlled the tenderloin district for a long period.

"If Mr. Clark would tell his story of being protected by officials in St. Louis, it would throw much light on this traffic," said the district attorney.

"There is no doubt that part of the official life of Vigo county and Terre Haute knew about this traffic."

"Buster" Clark said as he held up his hands, "I swear to God that just what has been said about protection is not true. They robbed me in Terre Haute."

District Attorney VanNuy rose to his feet and said to Clark: "Do you mean to tell this court that the police of Terre Haute never protected you in this traffic as well as the whisky traffic for at least three years?"

Clark said that was not true.

"I don't care to ask you any questions," said Mr. VanNuy.

Clark then said if his wife had done this a day.

OVER THREE SCORE YEARS OLD BUT IS FEELING FINE NOW

Indianapolis man suffered from rheumatism, kidney trouble, constipation and loss of sleep.

Draco gave him prompt relief and he now claims it to be the best medicine in the world.

Mr. George W. Matthews, who lives at 900 West Maryland street, has lived in Indianapolis, Ind., all his life. When he was a little boy, during the Civil War, he sold papers on the streets. He worked for the Big 4 R. R. (where he is still employed) as a brakeman in 1888, before air brakes were invented.

"For some time I've suffered from rheumatism of the joints and muscles. I could not bend over except with great pain and my joints would swell and pop with any quick movement," said Mr. Matthews. "My kidneys troubled me a great deal and I frequently had to get up during the night; my back ached almost constantly."

"My bowels were so badly constipated that I had to take some kind of medicine all the time; my nerves were on edge so that I hardly knew what a night of sound, refreshing sleep meant."

"One bottle of Draco has brought about a change in me. The rheumatic pains are gone; I never have a headache, can stoop and bend over like I was a boy again; my sleep is sound, and I rise of mornings feeling full of vim and vigor. Draco did for me what other medicines failed to do, and I gladly praise it."

The old-fashioned remedies, made from roots and herbs, are the best for any one to take. Draco is made from twelve different roots, herbs, barks and leaves. These act on the stomach, bowels and kidneys and purify the blood. Draco knocks rheumatism out shortly; relieves catarrh of the head and stomach; makes you sleep soundly and creates a good appetite. As a blood purifier nothing can equal Draco. It puts a stop to boils, eczema and other blood affections.

All good druggists now sell Draco, and it is especially introduced in Indianapolis by Clark & Cade's Claypool Hotel drug store.—Advertisement.

anything wrong he was to blame for her actions.

This dramatic recital ended with some of the admitted dope-users looking wistfully at a large box in the hands of Inspector Gwin which contained many boxes of morphine.

With this exposure of Clark and his wife and gangsters, Terre Haute now has removed from its city one of the most corrupt political and social characters in that city, government officials contend.

Clark has been a powerful political boss in the Terre Haute underworld for many years and his saloon was the scene of many orgies and political deals.
