

GRAND ARMY TO
BRING 100,000May House Visitors in Public School Buildings.

More than 100 reunions of various organizations will be held when the annual national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic and its auxiliaries comes to Indianapolis Sept. 19 to 23.

The encampment, it is believed, will bring 100,000 persons to Indianapolis, many of whom will be veterans of the Civil war and their families.

It is thought the encampment this year will be among the largest ever.

The ranks of the Grand Army are growing thinner every year, and, although an unusually large attendance is expected, less G. A. R. men will be here than were at encampments in the past, probably.

The reunions will be held in various parts of the city and will include regimental, battalion and company reunions of men who come together only once every year, men old and feeble, to recount experiences of fifty years ago.

Edward A. Kahn, chairman of the executive committee, said yesterday that the committee will ask the board of school commissioners for authority to house persons in public school buildings during the encampment.

The reunions will be held in various parts of the city and will include regimental, battalion and company reunions of men who come together only once every year, men old and feeble, to recount experiences of fifty years ago.

Edward A. Kahn, chairman of the executive committee, said yesterday that the committee will ask the board of school commissioners for authority to house persons in public school buildings during the encampment.

Wallace O. Lee is chairman of an information committee, and members are George E. Gill, G. F. Olwin, F. O. Belzer and Myron Green.

John Orman, chairman of the automobile committee and members are Mrs. Wilbur Johnson, Mrs. Chauncey DeW. Meier, George A. Crane and F. Ellis Hunter.

The complete organization probably will be perfected by the early part of next week.

The Right Thing
at the Right Time

By MARY MARSHALL S. DUFFEE

CANDY MANNERS.

There is really a very nicely balanced table of etiquette concerning candy.

Of course, the keynote of it is not to be greedy and not to be selfish—that is, not to be greedy if the candy belongs to somebody else, and not to be selfish if it is yours.

That's the whole case in a nutshell.

So if somebody opens a box of candy in your presence and passes it to you, you naturally take but one piece. If the possessor of the candy pieces opens a box of candy and helps himself, you help yourself very charitably. One or two pieces more are all that you really would take without further invitation.

To eat half the contents of the box, as some persons do, would be the height of rudeness.

And, on the other side of the question, if you have a box of candy, you should generously open it and pass it to your guests.

Candy is passing joy, anyway, and if you keep the box unopened and eat it all yourself, you will quite likely suffer a headache for your selfish indiscretion.

If a young man brings a young woman a box of candy when he calls on her, it is customary for her to open it immediately and pass it to him—and to anybody else who may be in the room. Copyright, 1920.

MOTHER!

"California Syrup of Figs" Child's Best Laxative

Accept "California" Syrup of Figs only—look for the name California on the package, then you are sure your child is having the best and most harmless physic for the little stomach, liver and bowels. Children love its fruity taste. Full directions on each bottle. You must say "California."—Advertisement.

The Right Thing
at the Right Time

By MARY MARSHALL S. DUFFEE

CANDY MANNERS.

There is really a very nicely balanced table of etiquette concerning candy.

Of course, the keynote of it is not to be greedy and not to be selfish—that is,

not to be greedy if the candy belongs to somebody else, and not to be selfish if it is yours.

That's the whole case in a nutshell.

So if somebody opens a box of candy in your presence and passes it to you, you naturally take but one piece. If the possessor of the candy pieces opens a box of candy and helps himself, you help yourself very charitably. One or two pieces more are all that you really would take without further invitation.

To eat half the contents of the box, as some persons do, would be the height of rudeness.

And, on the other side of the question, if you have a box of candy, you should generously open it and pass it to your guests.

Candy is passing joy, anyway, and if you keep the box unopened and eat it all yourself, you will quite likely suffer a headache for your selfish indiscretion.

If a young man brings a young woman a box of candy when he calls on her, it is customary for her to open it immediately and pass it to him—and to anybody else who may be in the room. Copyright, 1920.

The Right Thing
at the Right Time

By MARY MARSHALL S. DUFFEE

CANDY MANNERS.

There is really a very nicely balanced table of etiquette concerning candy.

Of course, the keynote of it is not to be greedy and not to be selfish—that is,

not to be greedy if the candy belongs to somebody else, and not to be selfish if it is yours.

That's the whole case in a nutshell.

So if somebody opens a box of candy in your presence and passes it to you, you naturally take but one piece. If the possessor of the candy pieces opens a box of candy and helps himself, you help yourself very charitably. One or two pieces more are all that you really would take without further invitation.

To eat half the contents of the box, as some persons do, would be the height of rudeness.

And, on the other side of the question, if you have a box of candy, you should generously open it and pass it to your guests.

Candy is passing joy, anyway, and if you keep the box unopened and eat it all yourself, you will quite likely suffer a headache for your selfish indiscretion.

If a young man brings a young woman a box of candy when he calls on her, it is customary for her to open it immediately and pass it to him—and to anybody else who may be in the room. Copyright, 1920.

The Right Thing
at the Right Time

By MARY MARSHALL S. DUFFEE

CANDY MANNERS.

There is really a very nicely balanced table of etiquette concerning candy.

Of course, the keynote of it is not to be greedy and not to be selfish—that is,

not to be greedy if the candy belongs to somebody else, and not to be selfish if it is yours.

That's the whole case in a nutshell.

So if somebody opens a box of candy in your presence and passes it to you, you naturally take but one piece. If the possessor of the candy pieces opens a box of candy and helps himself, you help yourself very charitably. One or two pieces more are all that you really would take without further invitation.

To eat half the contents of the box, as some persons do, would be the height of rudeness.

And, on the other side of the question, if you have a box of candy, you should generously open it and pass it to your guests.

Candy is passing joy, anyway, and if you keep the box unopened and eat it all yourself, you will quite likely suffer a headache for your selfish indiscretion.

If a young man brings a young woman a box of candy when he calls on her, it is customary for her to open it immediately and pass it to him—and to anybody else who may be in the room. Copyright, 1920.

The Right Thing
at the Right Time

By MARY MARSHALL S. DUFFEE

CANDY MANNERS.

There is really a very nicely balanced table of etiquette concerning candy.

Of course, the keynote of it is not to be greedy and not to be selfish—that is,

not to be greedy if the candy belongs to somebody else, and not to be selfish if it is yours.

That's the whole case in a nutshell.

So if somebody opens a box of candy in your presence and passes it to you, you naturally take but one piece. If the possessor of the candy pieces opens a box of candy and helps himself, you help yourself very charitably. One or two pieces more are all that you really would take without further invitation.

To eat half the contents of the box, as some persons do, would be the height of rudeness.

And, on the other side of the question, if you have a box of candy, you should generously open it and pass it to your guests.

Candy is passing joy, anyway, and if you keep the box unopened and eat it all yourself, you will quite likely suffer a headache for your selfish indiscretion.

If a young man brings a young woman a box of candy when he calls on her, it is customary for her to open it immediately and pass it to him—and to anybody else who may be in the room. Copyright, 1920.

The Right Thing
at the Right Time

By MARY MARSHALL S. DUFFEE

CANDY MANNERS.

There is really a very nicely balanced table of etiquette concerning candy.

Of course, the keynote of it is not to be greedy and not to be selfish—that is,

not to be greedy if the candy belongs to somebody else, and not to be selfish if it is yours.

That's the whole case in a nutshell.

So if somebody opens a box of candy in your presence and passes it to you, you naturally take but one piece. If the possessor of the candy pieces opens a box of candy and helps himself, you help yourself very charitably. One or two pieces more are all that you really would take without further invitation.

To eat half the contents of the box, as some persons do, would be the height of rudeness.

And, on the other side of the question, if you have a box of candy, you should generously open it and pass it to your guests.

Candy is passing joy, anyway, and if you keep the box unopened and eat it all yourself, you will quite likely suffer a headache for your selfish indiscretion.

If a young man brings a young woman a box of candy when he calls on her, it is customary for her to open it immediately and pass it to him—and to anybody else who may be in the room. Copyright, 1920.

The Right Thing
at the Right Time

By MARY MARSHALL S. DUFFEE

CANDY MANNERS.

There is really a very nicely balanced table of etiquette concerning candy.

Of course, the keynote of it is not to be greedy and not to be selfish—that is,

not to be greedy if the candy belongs to somebody else, and not to be selfish if it is yours.

That's the whole case in a nutshell.

So if somebody opens a box of candy in your presence and passes it to you, you naturally take but one piece. If the possessor of the candy pieces opens a box of candy and helps himself, you help yourself very charitably. One or two pieces more are all that you really would take without further invitation.

To eat half the contents of the box, as some persons do, would be the height of rudeness.

And, on the other side of the question, if you have a box of candy, you should generously open it and pass it to your guests.

Candy is passing joy, anyway, and if you keep the box unopened and eat it all yourself, you will quite likely suffer a headache for your selfish indiscretion.

If a young man brings a young woman a box of candy when he calls on her, it is customary for her to open it immediately and pass it to him—and to anybody else who may be in the room. Copyright, 1920.

The Right Thing
at the Right Time

By MARY MARSHALL S. DUFFEE

CANDY MANNERS.

There is really a very nicely balanced table of etiquette concerning candy.

Of course, the keynote of it is not to be greedy and not to be selfish—that is,

not to be greedy if the candy belongs to somebody else, and not to be selfish if it is yours.

That's the whole case in a nutshell.

So if somebody opens a box of candy in your presence and passes it to you, you naturally take but one piece. If the possessor of the candy pieces opens a box of candy and helps himself, you help yourself very charitably. One or two pieces more are all that you really would take without further invitation.

To eat half the contents of the box, as some persons do, would be the height of rudeness.

And, on the other side of the question, if you have a box of candy, you should generously open it and pass it to your guests.

Candy is passing joy, anyway, and if you keep the box unopened and eat it all yourself, you will quite likely suffer a headache for your selfish indiscretion.

If a young man brings a young woman a box of candy when he calls on her, it is customary for her to open it immediately and pass it to him—and to anybody else who may be in the room. Copyright, 1920.

The Right Thing
at the Right Time

By MARY MARSHALL S. DUFFEE

CANDY MANNERS.

There is really a very nicely balanced table of etiquette concerning candy.

Of course, the keynote of it is not to be greedy and not to be selfish—that is,

not to be greedy if the candy belongs to somebody else, and not to be selfish if it is yours.

That's the whole case in a nutshell.

So if somebody opens a box of candy in your presence and passes it to you, you naturally take but one piece. If the possessor of the candy pieces opens a box of candy and helps himself, you help yourself very charitably. One or two pieces more are all that you really would take without further invitation.

To eat half the contents of the box, as some persons do, would be the height of rudeness.

And, on the other side of the question, if you have a box of candy, you should generously open it and pass it to your guests.

Candy is passing joy, anyway, and if you keep the box unopened and eat it all yourself, you will quite likely suffer a headache for your selfish indiscretion.

If a young man brings a young woman a box of candy when he calls on her, it is customary for her to open it immediately and pass it to him—and to anybody else who may be in the room. Copyright, 1920.

The Right Thing
at the Right Time

By MARY MARSHALL S. DUFFEE

CANDY MANNERS.

There is really a very nicely balanced table of etiquette concerning candy.

Of course, the keynote of it is not to be greedy and not to be selfish—that is,

not to be greedy if the candy belongs to somebody else, and not to be selfish if it is yours.

That's the whole case in a nutshell.

So if somebody opens a box of candy in your presence and passes it to you, you naturally take but one piece. If the possessor of the candy pieces opens a box of candy and helps himself, you help yourself very charitably. One or two pieces more are all that you really would take without further invitation.

To eat half the contents of the box, as some persons do, would be the height of rudeness.

And, on the other side of the question, if you have a box of candy, you should generously open it and pass it to your guests.

Candy is passing joy, anyway, and if you keep the box unopened and eat it all yourself, you will quite likely suffer a headache for your selfish indiscretion.

If a young man brings a young woman a box of candy when he calls on her, it is customary for her to open it immediately and pass it to him—and to anybody else who may be in the room. Copyright, 1920.

The Right Thing
at the Right Time

By MARY MARSHALL S. DUFFEE

CANDY MANNERS.

There is really a very nicely balanced table of etiquette concerning candy.

Of course, the keynote of it is not to be greedy and not to be selfish—that is,

not to be greedy if the candy belongs to somebody else, and not to be selfish if it is yours.

That's the whole case in a nutshell.

So if somebody opens a box of candy in your presence and passes it to you, you naturally take but one piece. If the possessor of the candy pieces opens a box of