

MOVIE CONCERN ORGANIZED HERE

for Children and Child Grown-Ups Object.

The Courtlandt Pictures Corporation of Indianapolis has been organized and has announced its purpose to produce motion pictures for children and child grown-ups and to reproduce the fairy tales and the stories so dear to the imaginative mind of the child, and the grown-up who likes child stories.

The headquarters of the company will be in Indianapolis, but the plans comprise a studio in Los Angeles and distributing centers at several of the largest cities.

Offices have been established at 822 Hume-Mansur building.

The officers of the company are: President, Courtlandt J. Vandusen, professional motion picture director; vice president and general counsel, Alvah J. Rucker; secretary, C. R. Hamilton; treasurer, Otto L. Klaus, state auditor.

These men, with George V. Coffin, former Marion county sheriff and chief of police of Indianapolis, and James A. Collins, judge of the Marion criminal court, and J. P. Wild Jr., broker, will be the directors.

The Courtlandt Pictures Corporation is incorporated for $50,000, all common.

The par value of the shares is $10.

The company is an outgrowth of the idea of Mr. Vandusen, who has served in the picture industry as actor, director and executive since the days of the business.

Mr. Vandusen says the need of the picture business now is these pure, sweet, homely pictures which appeal to children and parents alike, pictures like "Treasure Island," "Pollyanna," "Peter Pan," "The Blue Bird," "Huckleberry Finn," etc., which are so often overlooked by the producers in the effort to outdo each other in the great spectacular effects of the screen stage.

The plan of the Courtlandt Pictures Corporation is to stage many of these

WHEN A GIRL MARRIES

A New Serial of Young Married Life

By ANN LITTLE

CHAPTER LXVII.

At last he came and sank into the chair beside me, just behind the one in which Evvy sat. He leaned forward gripping the top of her chair and whispered to her. And now the dawning airplanes were sinking to the level green at the bottom of the "bowl," pit-boys and repair men were darting about in their little dugouts along the inner circle of the track, and the grand stand there on one sector of the rim was leaning forward to a man watching the giant cars wheel into place, while drivers and mechanics groomed them as lovingly as if they'd been high-strung racehorses to nuzzle against the hands that had trained them.

Then the crack of a pistol, and thunder and lightning seemed to burst about us—as with the pop-pop of exhausts and the heavy droning of engines—the grand cars started on the 100-mile race that would take them fifty laps around the deep concave of the track.

When the cars reached the far side of the field the grandstand rose and, peering through field glasses, shouted that Wetmore, the favorite, was leading and "the Frenchman" had nosed ahead of the gray car. Crouching low we saw them whirl by in that formation again and again—ten laps—fifteen. Wetmore—the Frenchman—the gray car. Back to the track the Yankee Kid drove, half hidden behind the wheel of his low lung cream-colored car.

At the eighteenth lap he had come up to tenth place. At the twentieth he was eight. Then the gray car skidded, slowed up, and panted to the pit edge, where the repair men jacked it up and all in a minute or two had put on a new wheel and jerked off one with a flat tire. At the twenty-fifth lap—with the race half over—the Yankee Kid whirled by in sixth place.

Then Jim loosed his hold on the top rung of Evvy's chair, and turned to smile at me. He was wan and gray. I laid my hand in his and he crushed it fiercely for a moment. Then the pressure of his icy fingers relaxed and he hunched forward again, hanging over the top of Evvy's chair. And then like a young demon that Yankee Kid drove by again and again—annihilating space in the roar of his throbbing engine and whirling wheels. He was third; he was drawing up on the Frenchman again—the flag waved for the last lap—and with a year the cream-colored car dashed by and out on the track beyond the tape—the winner.

Evvy turned and smiled full in Jim's eyes.

"Did you play him for place or to win?" she cried in a tone that fairly glittered out in crispness unlike her usual purring huskiness.

"To win—as you told me. That was a real hunch, little Evvy. And now for your reward. Name it! Nothing's too good for you—partner. I can't thank you."

Jim's voice came in husky gasps; then it trailed off. His face was gray and his mouth twitched. For all the warmth of the sun which still rode high, he looked cold.

Evvy gave him a slow glance from eyes that veiled themselves languorously in closely curtained lashes. Her voice dripped honey as she murmured her answer.

"Hummie-boy, you may just take your little partner to dinner." Copyright, 1920.

What 'Ya Think, Huh? Reds Are in Alaska!

SEWARD, Alaska, July 23.—Considerable ill-feeling has been aroused in various parts of Alaska over the remarks of Gov. Thomas Riggs, Jr., concerning an alleged red menace in Alaska. Newspapers here and in other Alaskan towns are venting their disapproval editorially while others have come to his support. The objectionable statements are said to have been uttered by Riggs during a tour through the United States. "There are not a dozen bolsheviks in all of southeastern Alaska," a Juneau district writer retorts.
