FARM LIGHTING PLANTS POPULAR

Unit Systems Have Established Their Value.

Unit plants for farm lighting have so far proved themselves in the last few years that the demand for them has caused the establishment of large industries devoted wholly to their manufacture and these industries have expanded repeatedly, according to Ira T. Swartz, president of the Swartz Electric Company, the oldest exclusive makers of home electric light and power units in this country.

Mr. Swartz attributes the growth of the business largely to the fact that the farmers who are unable to connect with central power stations have studied the problems of home lighting and see in these plants a solution of their inability to obtain labor economically.

The demand of the trade, Mr. Swartz says, is for units that combine simplicity, durability and low cost of operation, the farmer having found that other power machines can be efficient without being complicated, and demanding this quality in his lighting equipment.

This demand is now being met by the manufacture of lighting units in plants under one roof rather than the assembly of plants from the products of various manufacturers. The growth of the industry concerns concern is referred to as a result of the creation of a product that was designed by the requirements of the purchaser.

New Minister Heard By Universalists

"If we do not do as Jesus did and answer the call of the church to come and worship together on the Sabbath day we are throwing aside the very means by which our fathers have built our nation," declared the Rev. Edwin Cunningham in his initial sermon yesterday as pastor of the Central Universal church of Indianapolis.

Rev. Cunningham occupied the pulpit of his new church yesterday for the first time, as he recently was called to this city from the First Universal church of Binghamton, N. Y.

LABOR FRIENDLY TO PROHIBITION

State Chairman Says Workers Don't Wish Booze.

The opposition of labor leaders to prohibition is friendly, according to a spokesman.

"Even the friends of brewers, Samuel Gompers, could not secure a declaration friendly to the return of beer and wine from the recent convention of the American Federation of Labor held at Montreal," declared J. Raymond Schmidt, acting prohibition state chairman in an address at West Washington Street M. E. building yesterday.

"Prohibition has not been accompanied by a wave of unemployment and low wages as the alarmists tried to make the public believe."

"Thousands of homes have enjoyed the prosperity of high wages because pay checks have been cashed by the grocer instead of the saloon keeper."

"At 12 o'clock, 492 bars, a new significance; prohibition has opened wider the door of opportunity for labor."

"Who is asking for beer and wine? We have had a single strike of what this was the cause."

"Are the foreigners in our midst demanding it as a condition upon which they will become naturalized?"

"We have no knowledge of great numbers returning to their native shores because this type of destructive personal liberty has been denied them."

"Mark my words, if the saloon ever comes back, it will not be the wish of the law, or the foreigner but the trenchancy of the politician who serves only his selfish ambitions."
