Says It Depends on Who Is Tying a Knot Whether It Is or Not

Kathleen, After Visit to Fire Congress, Decides She Will Not Be Rescued.

By KATHLEEN MCKEE.

According to the Indiana State fire marshal the best way to prevent a fire is to put it out. Anyway, all those hoses, nozzles, automobile headlights, graduated fire extinguishers and patent attachments used in the art of eliminating a fire which I saw at the fire congress at the Coliseum were things of beauty only to be rivaled by the Christmas tree decorations at the 10-cent store. Nor were they the only attraction on the program, for Leon L. Wolf of Cincinnati, who is touring the country gratuitously, giving demonstrations in scientific methods of fighting fires, was something to arrest the attention in his white all-wood suit.

When I arrived on the scene Mr. Wolf was the center of an admiring crowd. With unconcern he was tying an insignificant piece of rope in knots. Now, a knot sounds like a common ordinary knot, but it's not at all not when Mr. Wolf does it. In all my experience with knots I never was introduced to so many members of the knot family, having always been under the impression that most were knots which stayed tied and those which didn't. However, Mr. Wolf introduced me to the Blackwell Hitch, the Square Knot, the Granny, the Spanish Burton, the Carrick Bend, the Sheet Bend, the Cat's Paw and the Rolling Hitch. Then, as a final to the act he gave us a special introduction to the Bowline which he assured us was the most important knot ever tied.

TREW THE ROPE AROUND HIM.
Then he seized on a victim and tied him like a hog in a heavy water cask to be swung aboard in a heavy sea and assured his audience that he couldn't move his arms if he wished, which we already knew. By that time we knew how to save a man by tying him up in a rope.

Then he had a little course in the art of picking up a man. There are several ways you can perform this act. You can do it yourself or you can let one or two people help you. Of course the most heroic way is to do it yourself. After a little practice in this, I decided I might be able to pick up my office cat without dropping her. It caused me considerable debate to decide which looked the most awkward: the man doing the picking up or the individual who didn't know how to dispose of his pet when he was "picked."

I had hopes of seeing a free vaudeville show when the ladder instruction was started, but I was disappointed. Mr. Wolf proceeded to a moderate elevation on the ladder which was secured below by two individuals.

CAUTION ANYWAY.
"Now," he said, "you are just as safe as if the ladder were against a wall." Just then the ladder, which we had already seen, and Mr. Wolf yelled, "Hey, can you hold a thing still, and I decided I would prefer to do my life saving from the wall."

About this time we had some instructions in the art of lowering a ladder from the side and from the front. Suddenly a perfectly good diminutive cat personated in front of the lowering ladder. The fire chief stopped business while Kitty inspected the equipment. Majestically she stalked across the arena to the stove and ladder lowering was resumed.

My hopes of a melodramatic escape from a burning building were to be realized when Mr. Wolf began instructions in rescuing from a blazing structure. "If you wanted to put a ladder at the third story of a ten-story building, how many feet up the wall would you place it?" he asked us. Nothing doing, that sounded too much like the nth degree to suit me, at least you would have to do some calculating.

At last, the fireman gracefully ascends the ladder to rescue the heroine from the burning building. Instead of allowing her to put her arms around him he ties her hands with a rope to keep her from scratching him. I suppose, and as the last feat to spoil the scene he pours water all over her.

Six Men Fined for Violating Speed Law

On evidence showing six men violated the motor speed law by driving at break-neck speed through residence districts, Judge Pritchard meted out a fine of $1 and costs to each.

The six were: T. G. Arnold, 1845 Ludlow street; John Alexander, 22 West Morris street; John Obely, 819 South Delaware street; Merle Horton, 914 Ashland avenue; B. A. Whelan, 436 North Holmes avenue, and H. P. Willcuts, 913 East Washington street.

Both Err; Luckily 35 Bullets Go Wild

JACKSON, Mich., Nov. 30.—Mistaken for bootleggers, William Burg, a Jack-son jeweler, and Joseph Larue, an optician, both prominent citizens, narrowly escaped being shot to death today when thirty-five bullets were fired into their car.

They failed to obey a summons to halt, thinking they were being held up, and sped away, pursued by officers and bullets until the chase ended in front of the Jackson police station.

PLAN LAKE FOR NEW STATE PARK

Henry County to Have Fisherman's Paradise.

When Henry County obtains its Memorial park to be built as a lasting commemoration to the county's sons and daughters who participated in the world war, it is planned to stock the lake which will be one of the features of the park, with game fish and open the waters to piscatorial artists.

This information was sent to George N. Mannfeld, superintendent of the division of fish and game of the State department of conservation, who is asked by the Henry County Association to assist in building the lake and also to stock the waters from the State hatcheries.

According to the association members, Henry County so far has given sixty-four acres to the park project. Efforts are being made by the populace to acquire thirty acres adjoining and an additional four acres, the latter the property of a traction company. The thirty-acre tract is appraised at $5,000 and it is planned to raise this amount by popular subscription in a single day's drive.

Mr. Mannfeld has assured Henry County people that his division is ready at all times to assist in the laying out of the lake and the State will stock the waters when the proper time comes.

At the annual banquet of the Henry County Fish and Game Association, attended by more than 100 members, twenty-seven members voluntarily agreed into an agreement not to shoot quail this season. This step is taken in order the birds have a chance to propagate and multiply.

Conservation officials believe the action of the Henry County men will have a good influence on other game protective association in the State, and this quail will be given further protection to reproduce in goodly numbers. Unless some such voluntary action is taken or the law is made more restrictive, quail soon will become sadly diminished in Indiana.

Beveridge Plans Number of Talks

"The Development of the Constitution under John Marshall" is the title of the address to be made tomorrow night by Albert J. Beveridge at Ann Arbor, Mich., before the faculty and students of the University of Michigan and the lawyers of Detroit, who are planning to go in a body to the college city.

Mr. Beveridge will leave Indianapolis today. Following his address in Michigan Mr. Beveridge will go to New York City to deliver an address before the attorneys of that city on the subject, "The Growth and Meaning of the American Constitution." Mr. Beveridge recently was a guest of the newly organized Marshall Club in Buffalo, which practically every young lawyer of the city has joined.

On his return from the East Mr. Beveridge will address the students and faculty of De Pauw University and lawyers of Putnam County at a meeting in Greencastle on Monday night, Dec. 6, and on Dec. 8, he will speak before the students and faculty of Indiana University and the Monroe County Bar Association. He will speak on Dec. 15 at Marion.
