

MINERS LOCATE
LOST GOLD MINE

Claim, Abandoned 50 Years,
Found by Prospectors.

HEDDING, Cal., Dec. 8.—Has the famous "Lost Mine" been found?
George Rice, Del Taylor, George West and George Bryner, Shasta County miners, declare they have found it and pioneer miners are inclined to give credence to their story.
The four miners who declare they discovered the long-lost mine last June and have since been working it, have come out of the mountain fastness of the Squaw Creek district for the winter. They declare they located the mine twenty-two miles up Squaw Creek from Copper City. The well-established story is that in 1850 some miners found a rich claim far up Squaw Creek. All but one of them was massacred by the Indians.
The survivor came down to Copper City and told the story of the riches that were abandoned, but he was soon afterward drowned in Pitt River.
For years and years efforts have been made by prospectors to find the lost mine. It remained for the four miners to find the claim last June. It is in an almost inaccessible region and it was only accidentally that they stumbled on it.
They found a shaft fourteen feet and old rusty tools indicating that the claim had been abandoned in haste. Cleaning out the shaft they found a ledge of rich ore which proved to be gold quartz. There is lots of it, say the quartette, and it is rich, too.

WHEN A GIRL MARRIES
A New Serial of Young Married Life

By Ann Lisle

CHAPTER CVIII (Continued.)
But Betty wasn't in town.
The very day after Anthony Norrey's dinner she had left for an extended tour. There simply wasn't any one I could ask to come with me.
Tears of rage and mortification stood in my eyes, as I picked up the receiver to call Anthony Norrey and confess to him that I actually had no woman friend. But when the operator down stairs said "Number, please," I found myself giving a different number from what I had intended. Not Anthony Norrey's country place, but Betty Bryce's apartment in town.
And as I stood waiting with the black cylinder pressed to my ear, I realized that I couldn't reach Mr. Norrey now anyway. I had used at least half an hour in agitating myself and agonizing over my friendlessness. Mr. Norrey had said that he would call for me in an hour. If he had spoken from his own place—Noroton, as indeed I had no assurance that he had done—he would still be gone from there by now since it was a full forty-minute drive from Noroton to town.
Suddenly over the buzzing wire came one clear sound—miraculous joy-giving sound. Betty's voice!
"Betty! Betty! Oh, how wonderful that you should be there," I cried, half-sobbing with the relief of it—and sure the receiver, two unasked questions pulled between us.

From her: "Where's Jim? And why is his wife so anxious to dine with Anthony Norrey?"
From me: "What are you doing back in the city two weeks ahead of schedule, Betty? And why doesn't Terry know you're here?"—Copyright, 1920.
