

SAYS PARIS OF PAST GONE FOR TIME AT LEAST

Writer Observes Underlying Change Defying Customs of Old.

NIGHT LIFE THRIVING

NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—When by government edict an engineer pressed a button New Year's eve and flooded Paris for the first time since the war with her old pre-war electrical brilliance, the orchestra on the boulevards and the Montmartre fairly burst themselves trying to do justice to the occasion and champagne corks popped as they had never popped since 1914.

Taxis honking on the streets outside took up the refrain and students in the Latin quarter went singing in serpentine around the lamp-posts—just as they did before the war.

At that moment Paris from the standpoint of surface appearance once more became the gay old city of tradition.

But in the real sense, it was not the same Paris. It was a new Paris, going through many of the habitual gestures of the old.

For the old Paris, as hundreds of thousands of American tourists and students knew it and loved it, is gone—gone for a generation at least. The war changed the people who made Paris and not until these people are gone and another generation has taken their place can the old pleasure capital be herself.

PHYSICAL REVERSION TO 1914 COMPLETE.

Physically, Paris has completed her reversion to 1914. Menus are no longer stinted. The wine caves are full. The "rue de la nuit" are back on the Place de l'Opera with their "most interesting show around the corner." The boulevards are fragrant with femininity. So far as the Cook's tourist knows it's the same old city revived.

But the "Old Timer" knows that the people he sees are different from his cronies of 1914, and frequently even a new type of Frenchman altogether.

First, the H. C. of L. has lifted the price scale between 300 and 400 per cent. Parisians, who in 1914, could afford to dine with their families in the cafe, no longer people the boulevard restaurants. Their places have been taken by newly-rich and foreigners with high exchange rates.

Longchamp, where France's elite used to display its finest gowns, has been virtually boycotted by the real aristocracy. The only fashion show there is at the races now is kept up by "parvenues" or women of easy fortune.

The war worked a remarkable psychological change in the French people. It made them a nation of stoics.

NEARNESS TO WAR CHANGED FRENCH.

While the glimmers of the crusade on foreign soil unlocked the emotions of the British and turned staid London into one of the most demonstrative cities in the world, the long years of trench warfare, under the mud of their own country, among the ruins of their own homes, developed in the Frenchman a dogged self-restraint that he had never been thought capable of.

Hundreds of thousands wept in White Hall on Armistice day. Paris crowds looked on in almost expressionless silence as their unknown poll was escorted to the Arc. Among the multitudes who deposited wreaths I do not remember seeing one shedding tears.

This new mentality has seized the entire nation. It is reflected in all classes, for all were in the war.

Behind the bright eyes that invite you so appealingly on the boulevards, often throbs a broken heart. A youthful widow or fiancée who lost her lover out there. A surprising number of the merry-makers in the really Latin rendezvous of Montmartre wear mourning on their countenances.

Thus Paris could not, even if she would, be the old carefree effusive city of pre-war days—not for a generation, at least.

HE DARKENED HIS GRAY HAIR

Tells How He Did It.

Mr. J. A. McCrea, a well-known resident of California, who was called Daddy and Grandpa on account of his white hair, and who darkened it with a home-made mixture, recently made the following statement:

"Any one can prepare a simple mixture at home that will darken gray hair, and make it soft and glossy. To a half pint of water add 1 ounce of bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and ¼ ounce of glycerine.

"These ingredients can be bought at any drug store at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained. It does not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off."
