'Coal Review' Advises Talking
Good Times.

"Better news is on the way," says Coal Review, in the foreword to this week's issue which sees signs of an early business revival.

It reads:

"If you're down in the mouth, cheer up. The silver lining is beginning to show. Production may be in the doldrums for the moment, but it has been worse. Remember January, 1919? The market may be flat, but everywhere there are signs of early business revival. And we're not going into midwinter with a 40,000,000 stock pile like we did after the armistice.

"The wheels of industry are beginning to speed. It takes a little time to go from dead center to full speed. And it takes coal to do it. The faster the wheels go, the more the coal is needed. That portion of the truth which the committee of the Senate still hangs over the industry, but which is being tested by the coal committee is being docketed with that portion which the committee failed to put in the record.

"And there is the coal trade. It isn't ephemeral. It's here to stay if the coal producers of the United States will cultivate their foreign customers.

"And look for better times. Think better times. Think better times. They are on the way, and you can lend your influence to speeding them along."

PROTEST VOICED

Mayor Criticized in Mock Hold-up Affair.

Special to The Times.

NOBLESVILLE, Ind., Feb. 5.—A storm of criticism is being hurled at Mayor McCann of this city and letters to the local newspapers from indignantly citizens demand his immediate resignation, for permitting a "fake" hold-up which was staged in Noblesville Friday noon as a means of advertising an entertainment.

Word was sent to the chief of Indianapolis police and a squad of officers was sent from that city to Fisher's Station in an effort to aid in the capture of the supposed bandits.

The mayor says he knew of the plan that was to be carried out, but denies he gave permission for the use of firearms. Four masked men in an automobile drove up to the Cravens drug store and three of them in the capacity of "robbers" drew revolvers, ordered the clerks to hold up their hands and proceeded to rob the cash drawer, taking $30. They then backed out a rear door, jumped in the waiting car and started toward Indianapolis. Several shots were fired at them as they passed business houses.

E. W. Mow, superintendent of the telephone company, whose office is near the "robbed" drug store, was not aware that the hold-up was a fake, and notified Indianapolis police.

INDUSTRY OF AMERICA FAILS IN BUILDING

Housing Situation Calls for Organization and Construction in Large Way.
CITIES MUST TAKE LEAD

BY FREDERICK J. HASKIN.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 5.—Great corporations in every city to build houses for us in groups of at least 300 and to retain the management and administration of those houses as long as they last.

That is the solution of the housing problem which is proposed by John H. B. Haskin, manager of civic development for the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. He offers it as his personal opinion as to what should be done. But about 100 of the local Chambers of Commerce have already formed housing committees for this purpose, and the national chamber is preparing to hold a series of conferences, with Mr. Haskin as consulting specialist, to determine upon a national housing plan. So it may be safely guessed that the Chamber of Commerce of the United States will attempt to solve the housing problem by applying big business organization and efficiency to it.

The move is significant. It seems to be the first organized effort to solve the housing problem in this country. It may be taken as the effort of American capital to meet its responsibility in this regard.

HOUSING PROBLEM WORLD-WIDE.

The housing problem is world wide. In every country that engaged in the war, building of dwellings practically ceased for two to four years. In England it was immediately recognized that private capital was not competent to handle the problem. It was neither prepared nor willing to do anything adequate. Neither could the British workman pay the rents which must be paid if capital is to get its interest back. Yet men and women were dying for lack of houses. The British government decided that it was necessary to save the British people even if British capitalism suffered something of a setback in the process. Therefore the British government proceeded to build houses. It did build and is building them by the thousands. It is renting them for less than they are worth. The measure is a measure of state socialism of what is commonly dubbed paternalism in this country. It is a body blow at private capital. It seems to have been the beginning of a general process of socialization in England. But had to be done. Capital couldn't do the work.

WAR BRINGS DEMONSTRATION.

The same thing was true in this country during the war. Demand for war workers simply had to be had at once and at reasonable prices. So government had to build them. But after the armistice the Government Housing Corporation did not quickly get out of business. It first demonstrated that houses for workers can be made attractive and can be grouped into pretty villages, and that workers appreciate such houses.

This country does not face so serious a post-war housing problem as Great Britain. Yet it is more serious than you realize unless you are hunting an apartment. We are about a million and a quarter short of the number of houses we need in order to house our population as well as we did before the war. This means that there are at least four million more people in the United States than we have comfortable housing room for.

That is bad enough. But the worst of it is that nothing adequate is being done to remedy the situation. Capital has not met the emergency in this country, any more than it did in England. And government has not even tried. The revolution against government ownership, control and initiative, which followed the war, made that impossible. We have therefore preserved intact our beloved system of private enterprise, but the said enterprise in the building trades has not made itself conspicuous except in the unsavory ways recently revealed in the New York investigations.

SITUATION GROWS WORSE.

You think you need good deal of building going on. Then consider these facts: For seven years before the war we built an average of 450,000 houses a year. In 1917 we built a good part of this number. In 1918 we built hardly any. In 1919 we built about 70,000. And in 1920 the total promises to be less than in 1919.

Consider that last sentence. The housing situation so far is not getting better. It is getting worse. We are not falling to make up the shortage in houses; we are falling to keep up with the demand. The increase in the population. The housing situation will almost certainly be worse a year from now than it is today. Our building industry has fallen down on the job.

Of course you cannot blame the building industry as a unit. Costs are high. People want more material. There is plenty of idle labor. There are several million people who need houses. And yet houses are not built. Those magical forces of supply and demand upon which we so implicitly rely are simply not working.

HOMES FOR WAGE EARNERS NOT BUILT.

Most of the houses you see going up are expensive houses. Most of them are Poke Easley notices that the dummy in the show window at the Tickville clothing store has at last got next to everything going down and now wears a suit that costs about half as much as it did six months ago.

A young man from a distant city spent the week-end as the guest of the Tickville banker's daughter. Crickled Hicks inquired around and found the fellow has five neckties.

The Tickville town marshal has bought another chair and is preparing to take his seat in office for another term.

the houses of men who made a stake in the war, and are now spending some of it. They do not care if it does cost a few thousand more. The modest house of seven or eight rooms, for the man who works for a salary, is being built in very small numbers. And the five or six-room house, the house for the wage earner, is not being built at all. Furthermore, most of the houses being built for rent and for sale are being built of poor material. The woodwork and the hardware are of the cheapest kind. The construction, say men who know, is not of the kind calculated to last.

In this situation, you see the importance of any move that the Chamber of Commerce may make. It is up to somebody to make a move. From somewhere must come initiative and organization. So far as housing is concerned, American industry has fallen down. Let whoever claims the responsibility for it come forward and pick it up. If capital claims that it can serve the country's need for leadership, initiative and organization in industrial life, this is its chance to prove the fact to gain and hold the country's confidence.

It is with some realization of this fact that the Chamber of Commerce sits down during the week-end to plan a housing plan. Naturally, it sees the solution of the problem in business organization. It points out that the building of houses is one of those industries which has to a great extent passed out of the control of the "little fellow." Furthermore, the building of the house, the sale of it, and the administration of it, in case it is rented, have all developed upon different individuals or organizations. Responsibility is divided.

ECONOMY IN LARGER BUILDING OPERATIONS.

Mr. Haskin proposes in each town of good size several large building corporations. These corporations would buy land in large tracts and build houses in suburbs. They would seldom build more than 300 houses in a unit. That there would be great economy in such large-scale operations can not be denied. Furthermore, Mr. Haskin would have these corporations retain the administration of the houses permanently. The occupants would be shareholders in the corporation and would have a vote in this way all the economy and efficiency of a large scale operation and large organization would be gained. These housing corporations could employ the best architects, landscape gardeners and other specialists. They could make planned, artistic units of their suburbs, instead of hodgepodge growth.

Such a system would have all the advantages of large corporate control, as well as its advantages. The housing corporations in a given town would soon dominate the real estate situation. You would have to buy or rent from that housing corporation and at its prices.

But corporation control is the system by which we live. The large corporation at least does the work. This housing corporation would probably build the houses.

Mr. Haskin would not have any Government supervision or control of these limited-dividend companies. He points out that the occupant of a house would further be protected against exploitation by the fact that he and his fellow-tenants would be stockholders in the corporation.

BENCH AND BAR PAY TRIBUTE TO A. J. BEVERIDGE

Dinner Attended by More Than 350 Members of Law Profession.
JUDICIARY PLEA MADE

More than 350 representatives of the bench and bar of Indiana attended the dinner given by the Indiana State Bar Association, the Indianapolis Bar Association and the Lawyers' Club in honor of Albert J. Beveridge in the Riley room at the Clapp Hotel last night.

Frank C. Dalley, former United States district attorney, acted as toastmaster and introduced the five speakers of the evening. Henry M. Bates, dean of the University of Michigan law school, William Marshall Bullitt, Louisville, Ky.; George T. Buckingham, Chicago; Karl C. Schuyler, Denver, Colo., and Mr. Beveridge.

In his address Mr. Beveridge made a strong plea for the judicial branch of the government and said that it is the keystone of our American governmental system.

BENCH APPROACHES SACRED POSITION.

"While nothing merely human can be said to be sacred, the judiciary of this country is the most sacred of all," said Mr. Beveridge. "It is the body which holds in its hands the people's justice and is charged with the safeguarding of our American institutions."

Mr. Beveridge expressed doubt as to the stability and permanence of the British system of government with a parliament supreme in all matters and with no judicial body with power to question the validity of any laws enacted by parliament.

"The power of the hereditary ruling class which Macaulay declared, for ages had stood between ordered liberty and anarchy, is rapidly diminishing and soon will be utterly destroyed in the domestic concerns of the United Kingdom. When that happens, when the majority is instantly registered by acts of parliament—what then will become of private property, individual rights and the rights of minorities?"

ENGLISH HOME PASSING.

England's hereditary ruling class stills and perhaps always will be dominant in the foreign affairs of her far-flung and triumphant empire, but the home is swiftly passing, and when it ceases to exist, the fact of the matter will face its first genuine crisis and meet its first real test.

The other speakers united in placing Beveridge's "Life of John Marshall" among one of the great biographical works of the present generation.

Guests seated at the speakers' table included former Governor Samuel M. Haislett, Judge Albert B. Anderson, L. Ert Slack, former United States district attorney; Elmer E. Stevenson, Judge Selma B. Carter, Larz Whitcomb and George L. Denry.

It was announced by Russell Zitter, chairman of the entertainment committee, that the dinner to be held in the dining room of the Chamber of Commerce, the tentative date being the next regular meeting night of the junior chamber.

Chushman Hoke, a member of the junior chamber, in a ten-minute talk, described the organization of the Holcomb & Hoke Manufacturing Company and its method of selling.

Little Theater Receives Play With Enthusiasm.

"One who uses force to resist pressure. That's a terse definition of a molly, humorist or otherwise."

And in the three-act comedy "The Mollusc," by Hubert Henry Davies, presented last night by the Little Theater after the dramatic "The Mollusc," the audience was given a real presentation of the feminine form of human mollusc, in the character of Mrs. Baxter, who had to work hard to make other people do the things she should do and assume the responsibilities that were hers. The plot of the play is built around Mrs. Baxter, who as a result of her molly tendencies, almost loses her husband's affections. She gets to the point when she even turns over her rather exciting companionship to a young man, the charming capable governor, who waits on Mrs. Baxter's whims, hand and foot. The arrival of Brother Tom, who knows his sister's mollusc disposition, brings complications and disruption in the household and, in the final scene, Mrs. Baxter discovers her husband's return to his mollusc disposition, and she is left with a happy frame of mind.

The cast of characters was excellent. There were but four actors, including Mrs. Eugene Elfr, who took the part of Mrs. Baxter; Mrs. Margaret Bird, as Miss Roberts; Robert M. Browning, as Tom Kemp; and H. L. Earnest.

Mrs. Elfr made a very effective and realistic "lady mollusc." Her actions were at all times without affectation and she read her lines with a natural air that was decidedly pleasing. Mrs. Bird, versatile in her part, gave a nice interpretation of the Puritan "conscience" young governor, who has no idea that she is "vamping" the husband and friend brother of that she is the big factor in forming the useless, languid nature of Mrs. Baxter. Robert Browning, as the breezy sceptical brother from Colorado, seemed very much at ease as a player as also did Mr. Earnest, whose portrayal of the humbugged, soft-hearted, yet at times rebellious husband was most skilfully given.

An attractive combination of gold and blues made the stage setting unusually effective, and the frocks worn by Mrs. Bird and the dining negligee of Mrs. Baxter were worthy of note, blending in artfully with the general color scheme.

On the whole, "The Mollusc" was one of the best things that the Little Theater has produced, and the audience was most enthusiastically received by the large audience.

On March 11, a big all-American bill will be presented by the Little Theater, with "The Mollusc" as the main attraction. The bill also includes "The Emperor Jones," Eugene O'Neill's latest sensation.

A committee to further his campaign was formed, consisting of L. W. Carneal, clerk, chairman; Ben Branson as vice chairman, Ed Nivens, secretary; Herman Rickhoff, treasurer.

Joseph Hogue, former street commissioner of Indianapolis, has taken charge of the preliminary organization work and it is planned to complete it by wards and precincts.

He said these statements were being circulated by his political enemies and assured those present that he would not under any circumstances retire from the race.
