

GERMAN TOTS SUFFER MOST AS WAR RESULT

Story of Relief Work Among Children of Europe Tells of Real Calamity.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The condition of German children, and the organized efforts which American philanthropists are making to help them, were vividly described to us by an American who recently left Berlin.

The children of Germany turn out to have been the greatest sufferers of all, and the greatest calamity of the war for Germany and for the whole world, is that millions of European children are being starved and stunted.

Kindergarten of the American Friends Service committee at 2 Dorotheenstrasse, Berlin, which has direction of the child-feeding work of the American Relief Administration in Germany, is at present feeding 500,000 children a day, and if the voluntary contributions on which this work depends permit, that number will be increased to one million this year.

In the first school visited, a parish or government school, the children were eating in the gymnasium. While older boys were going through exercises in the back of the room, children selected according to their needs lined up for feeding at the other end. Each had a tin cup and spoon and in turn received a big portion of rice and milk from the two teachers who handled the work. The children all have food cards, which they must show to the teacher, who keeps a careful record of every meal given. An American worker supervises the distribution and sees that the food is eaten on the premises, not wasted and is given where the need is greatest. In this school there were no boys, so the little girls took their bowls away, sitting in corners under parallel bars or on "horses," while the boys grouped together and chattered vociferously in intervals of eating.

In another block of this huge brick building was a Lyzeum Schule or girls' high school where some feeding is also carried on. Here the girls eat in a classroom seated at their desks. Girls in the high school ranging from 6 to 14 in age are better clad and in slightly better physical condition. They come from upper middle class families.

The next place visited was a Catholic school, where the principal, a small, energetic man, eating his own lunch (a bread and butter sandwich) was supervising the child feeding. The food had been given out here in the entrance hall and two little boys with long spoons were busy scraping the last vestige of rice from the big container, a former army kettle. It was almost as clean as if it had been scoured with hot water. In the same district is a kindergarten, comfortably housed in a little frame house. There the little children had just finished their meal and were marching around the room in pairs, singing songs. They were from 2 to 6 years in age, and during the feeding hour their mothers are invited to come in and share in the hot lunch.

POOR SECTION OF BERLIN NOT SLUMS.

Another day was spent in a poorer district. The poor section of Berlin could never be called a slum. The streets are wide and clean and the buildings well constructed, in no way resembling the slums of New York or London. But closer inspection reveals the poverty and misery of the German working class today. The women are hatless and with the thermometer at zero have only shawls to wrap around their thin dresses. The houses are inadequate, wooden-soled clogs and cheap carpet slippers being general. The faces seen on all sides are pinched, worn, dull-gray or white in color. The schools here, too, are housed in good buildings, but the children line up for the daily feeding tell the universal story of chronic undernourishment. On this day the bowls were filled with a hot mixture of beans and rice and much to their delight each child was also handed a big sweet white roll. These rolls are given four times a week. Poverty-stricken as it is, the German government has undertaken to supply the flour and sugar for the rolls during the next six months.

Nearly two rooms have been taken and fitted up for use as a dining room for mothers. Every morning between 10 and 12 o'clock 128 of them come for a hot meal. They have the same food as that given to the children, but larger portions. All the women are either nursing young babies or are expectant mothers. They are chosen by a local committee of doctors in the same way as the school children. In these rooms children up to 6 years come in the afternoon for food. The feeding of mothers and very young children is more difficult on account of having the central place in which food can be served and no organization to work through as in the schools. At the kitchen for this feeding where 10,000 meals a day are prepared, is another dining room for mothers, seating 200 every afternoon.

A very interesting group of children was seen in another thickly populated district of working class families. Here three big schools were grouped together in one "complex," the buildings having distinct entrances on different streets. There was a boys' school, a girls' school and one for deaf and dumb children of both sexes. These latter were in very bad physical condition, many being tubercular. After finding out by signs from their teachers that their visitors were foreigners they asked for postage stamps and it was pathetic to see the eagerness with which these young collectors pounced on the most common American postage stamps. As the teacher said, it indicates the isolation into which Germany has been plunged by the war. The meal this time was hot chocolate, served with a sort of cornstarch pudding. A generous bowl of this with the big white roll was a meal to be envied and it is probably the most popular of the six menus served every week. The huge kitchen for this district, all the equipment of which is old army material, supplies 28,000 of these meals daily.

In every child-feeding center throughout Germany is displayed a printed notice telling of the regulations of the feeding work of the Society of Friends. In the past, notably in Catholic Bavaria, there has been some objection to this by Germans who feared that one motive of the campaign was to convert the children to another religion. But the work has been thoroughly demonstrated that the spirit behind the work is simply one of practical philanthropy, in which differences of creed play no part. Today when a German urchin asks a playmate if he has been "Quakerized" it is not a religious question, but simply an inquiry to whether or not he is to be favored to be on the Friends' feeding list. The money given for this work comes from many sources, mostly in humble gifts, and only a portion of it is from the Society of Friends. Nor are all the workers, many of whom are Germans, members of this society. The direction of the whole work is in their hands, however, because of their efficiency and the self-sacrifice with which they have undertaken a service of relief as important as any in the world. Every Friend in Germany today is a volunteer, unpaid worker.

A great deal of care has been taken by the Friends to insure that this help will go where it is most needed. The work is largely decentralized and local committees of German doctors, teachers and social workers select from the most needy those who are to be favored. The meal is arranged as an extra and being given between 10 and 11 o'clock in the morning supplements the food the child may be getting at home. Without it, however, many children would go

Princess Pat's Son Is Bouncing Lad

This intimate glimpse of England's most beloved noblewoman, Lady Patricia Ramsey, shows her with her young son, "Princess Pat," as all England knows her, was popular with English folk before her marriage because of her sympathetic nature, her beauty and her democratic ways. And when she spurred offers of numerous titled men and married Commander Alexander R. N. Ramsey, an untitled Britisher in the navy, she engaged herself more. Ramsey since has come into a title of his own.

breakfastless. All food must be eaten on the spot. It is necessary to enforce this rule strictly because at first it was found that children would run outside and give their portion to a waiting parent to take home. Then, too, children might be kept at home intentionally if there was a chance of the meal being sent to the house.

The next place visited, to whom none of the responsibility for the war can be traced, stand in great need of assistance is obvious. Most of them are pale, listless and underfed. A little boy who was pointed out as a 9 years of age looked scarcely 5. It is the same with the girls. They are flat-chested, with unhealthy protuberant stomachs and spindly, rickety legs. They come eagerly for the food and eat with enjoyment. A feeding period lasts for three months, at the end of which time the children are examined by doctors. Those who show considerable improvement must be dropped from the list in order to make room for some new child in need, for lack of money limits the work of the American Friends Service committee to the very neediest cases.

GERMAN TONGUE FRIENDS ACTIVE

Senate Amendment Suggested to Get Action.

What has become known as the Allen County lobby, which is interested in seeing the ban against the teaching of the German language in the schools of Indiana lifted, became active again today.

Harry G. Hogan, Republican chairman of the Twelfth district, who is anxious to see the Republican Legislature redeem his pledge to the Allen County citizens of German descent that the ban would be raised in return for their support of the G. O. P. cause, was on the scene early this morning. It is understood he is seeking the Committee on Education, which has Senator William E. Bowers' German bill in hand, to report it out with an amendment favoring the elimination of all modern foreign languages from the curriculum of the elementary and parochial schools.

BOWERS MAKES SUGGESTION. Senator Bowers himself has made this suggestion to the committee and Byron Somers, president of the Ft. Wayne school board, and who has lobbied as assiduously as Mr. Hogan, is also understood to favor this move.

Mr. Hogan wishes to get the bill on the floor of the Senate and it is reported he still feels that the restriction against the teaching of German can be removed by careful maneuvering. Wilbur Carpenter of Ft. Wayne, first assistant clerk of the Appellate and Supreme Courts, also showed renewed activity among the Senators. Mr. Carpenter has been on the job for his Ft. Wayne colleagues ever since the session started and has spent a great deal of his time in working for their interests.

RECALL FAILURE TO KEEP UP REPORTS.

Mr. Carpenter draws $200 a month from his official position. It has been recalled by several legislators interested in the work of the Allen County men that the clerk of the Appellate and Supreme Courts came under the fire of the Indiana Bar Association last summer for failure to have the court reports up to date. One of the pleas in extenuation of this failure advanced at that time by Will H. Adams, clerk of the court, was that he did not have the proper assistance.

The clerk's office is also understood to be much interested in the fate of a bill introduced by Senator Robert L. Moore, of Indianapolis, which has been sent to his home in Charleston, Ill.

Evans Takes Another Federal Hotel Step

Action citing Monroe D. George, who was one of the party defendants to the Federal Hotel restraining order case, but later released as a defendant when a temporary injunction was issued because it was shown he had no interest in the hotel property, for contempt of court and calling on him to show why he should not be punished, was filed today in Superior Court, room 3, by Prosecutor William P. Evans.

It is charged George attempted to influence Mrs. W. G. Wanser, a witness for the State at the temporary injunction hearing last Saturday, for the purpose of "threatening and intimidating" the witness from "giving further testimony."

Service will be obtained on Mr. George this afternoon, it was announced, and the date for hearing will be announced later.

OWE LIVES TO MAN'S BRAVERY

Ship Wrecked, Line Carried Ashore Saves All.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 7.—To the heroism of a member of the crew of the steam coasting schooner Klamath, wrecked early Saturday on the rocky Mendocino County coast line at Delmar, the nineteen passengers and thirty-four members of the crew owe their lives.

When, shortly after 2 o'clock, the vessel, which had been drifting helplessly before an eighty-five-mile-an-hour gale, hit the rocks near Delmar, a sailor volunteered to attempt to carry a line ashore. With two lines tied to his waist he jumped into the angry waters which were rolling in mountainous waves over the ship. Anxious the nineteen passengers, who were by this time huddled together at the rail, watched him fight his way through the surf to the coast line, 2,800 feet distant.

A breeches buoy was quickly rigged and in accordance with the tradition of the sea, the women and children went ashore first.
