

HAAGS MOTOR TO STATE FARM

Begin Serving 30 Days' Term for Prohibition Law Violation.

After a leisurely ride with Sheriff George Snider as their "chaperon," Julius A. and Louis E. Haags, Indianapolis druggists, today were inmates of the Indiana State Farm.

The Haags brothers became inmates of the Indiana State Farm at 8:45 o'clock last night when they rolled up in their own automobile at the farm where they were received by Superintendent Talkington.

Sheriff Snider remained at the farm only long enough to secure papers, showing that he had carried out the orders of Judge Will Sparks, who sentenced the Haags to thirty days on the farm and fined each of them $400 for violating the State prohibition law.

The Haags were convicted in Criminal Court Oct. 23, 1930, and appealed to the Indiana State Supreme Court. This appeal was dismissed by counsel while the Haags were serving a Federal sentence at Atlanta, Ga., for violating the Reed amendment.

HOME COMING LAST WEEK.

The Haags returned to Indianapolis last week, after being paroled from the Federal prison after serving six months of an eighteen months' sentence. They slipped quietly into Indianapolis and their parole did not become known generally here until the local papers received instructions from the warden at the Federal prison to stop sending papers to the prison for the Haags as they were no longer there.

There was a lot of "smoke" kicked up by attacks of the sheriff's office regarding the method to get the Haags into custody. Sheriff Snider stated that by an agreement with John Ruckelshaus, attorney for the Haags, he called for the brothers at one of their stores at 3:30 p. m., and the trip to the farm began shortly thereafter.

The sheriff said the Haags did not do much talking while on the way to the farm.

HAAGS WISH TO GET SENTENCE OUT OF WAY.

"The Haags went to the farm with the intention of serving the thirty days and getting the sentence out of the way," said the sheriff. "They are taking their medicine like men."

He added that there was nothing to indicate that the Haags expected to receive a parole or any leniency from State authorities.

The Haags, by arranging their own trip and surrender, saved themselves from spending five days in a cell in the Marion County Jail.

Judge Sparks came up from Rush County Monday and made the final entry in the case, showing that the appeal has been dismissed. The court ordered the clerk to make a copy of the judgment and give it to the sheriff with a commitment. The court's order charged the sheriff with execution of the judgment of the court. It will be remembered that in the Dennis Bush case Sheriff Snider held Bush in jail for several days before taking him to the farm.

He decided that her manners needed brushing up a bit before she could properly take her place in his "set," so he arranged for her "education" into the ways of society. What happened during the process of her schooling will give you many a good long laugh.
