WHO is going to be the first man to join the Republican women in their new club?

HOWEVER, the poor sick of Indiana whose illness can only be cured by copious quantities of beer and wine will have to move or do without.

ANYHOW, there seems to be no doubt left in the minds of any one over the justice of giving the street car company relief of some kind!

IT DOES APPEAR that there are a few people in Indianapolis who are not wholly in sympathy with the dissection of dogs, either for practice or experimentation.

NOR IS IT DIFFICULT to understand why a certain newspaper refrained from comment on the law enforcement plank of Mr. Thomas C. Howe's platform while it lauded the rest of it.

THE GOVERNOR of Oklahoma is about to be impeached and one of the charges against him is that he pardoned or paroled 1,900 prisoners. Goodrich equaled that record in Indiana and regarded it as a mark of high honor.

Rent Reductions

High rents are beginning to tumble in various parts of the United States. Reports recently from Atlanta, Ga., and St. Paul, Minn., tells of substantial general reductions made by landlords to their tenants.

Such reports are viewed with considerable satisfaction by local renters who see in them a tendency that will some time become manifest in Indianapolis.

But before the impression is created that Indianapolis landlords should follow the same policy of reduction in rentals it might be well to give attention to the other side of the question.

Neither Minnesota nor Georgia has undergone the travail caused by a Goodrich, intent upon the enactment of "the best tax law possible under our constitution." Neither of these States raised property valuations to the inflated war-time standard under the pretext of lowering tax rates. Neither of these States found it necessary to restore the old rates of taxation after having doubled the assessed value of property.

In Indiana, and in Indianapolis particularly, there will be no appreciable reduction in rentals until taxes are brought down to a level that leaves a property owner a part of his income for other purposes than satisfaction of the greed of administrators that appear to have no other purpose than the expenditure of all the money they can squeeze from the taxpayers.

Mayor Jewett's administration increased the cost of our city government more than two million dollars last year, and in addition to this increase was responsible for the saddling of $2,500,000 more in special assessments on the property owners of the city.

Landlords must pay their share of this $4,500,000. No property owner can afford to rent his property at the same level that he did before the present "economical" administration increased the expenses of government beyond all precedent.

Renters who anticipate reduction in the prices they pay for the right to occupy property might as well realize that they are not going to be until the landlord is lucky enough to get out from under the high cost of owning property.

Taxes will not be reduced in Indianapolis and rents will not fall as long as the community is compelled to pay the price of maintaining the municipal organization that is now a part and parcel of the city administration.

Treasurer Lemcke recently said that the political organization for which the renters and the landlords are now putting up good money would control Indianapolis for the next seven years.

The Cost of Schools

The spirit of America is to give every racer a fair start and half of the road, but it seems that at times the public is so indifferent that an injustice is done unconsciously. For example in matters of education.

The school teacher, however efficient, was underpaid for years—is not overpaid even now. The item of school support of the nation is ridiculously low compared with luxuries which the public purchases without a second thought. Added to all this is the inevitable fact that school houses and appliances will wear out. Just recently the State board of health condemned over fifty houses as insanitary and unfit for school purposes, probably over the protest of many patrons, too.

It is obvious that as good an education as possible should be given to the youth of the country and no pains nor expense should be spared to bestow this inestimable boon to every one alike. However, when the indisputable figures are presented, showing that schools are allowed to deteriorate and that old buildings are kept instead of up-to-date schools, it indicates a need of action.

When so many children in a rich city like Indianapolis are able to attend school only half a day because of insufficient buildings, the spirit of fair play is violated.

The expenditure of more money for military purpose than for education is not a healthy state of affairs, neither is the spending of so much for luxuries to the loss of education the way to build a nation.

Useless Milk

A Boston dispatch announces the discovery of a synthetic milk by a doctor in a sanitarium. The ingredients are also given, and as they are not to be distilled, one is safe in starting a milk plant without danger of interference by the government nor kick by the cow nor by the product.

Ground oats with peanuts, a little salt and water are used. Even the color of milk is obtained by kneading the mash. Whether this milk will be as desirable as the genuine article for food is not stated. It probably will not, but even in the adjoining state of wooden nutmeg fame, but in times of high prices, when the cow refuses to do her whole duty, the owner is safe in converting her into beef and from then on using the synthetic product.

If the function of the raw peanuts, shelled, of course, is to supply the creamy part, then naturally by adding more nuts, more cream may be produced and probably an excellent ice cream product can be made very easily.

Account of the constitutional amendment no eggno should be made of near milk, but owing to the cheapness of the mixture it will be popular for many a person hitherto too poor, to enjoy a milk bath, just as did one of the famous beauties of the stage a generation ago.

No announcement of the byproduct of this milk is made at this time, neither can it be stated if it would be called peanut butter milk or oleomargarine butter. It is not disclosed as to whether any headache is expected to follow the use of too much milk.

The Rich and Poor

It must be admitted that the medical profession is unique in the fact that there are two classes which obtain the very best kind of treatment; the rich and the very poor. In no other affairs of human activity do the poor share equally with the very rich, for money can usually command much that poverty must forego. This is true in all other professions. There is scarcely a physician who does not give his services to those who are unable to buy them. Many a noted surgeon leaves his rich patients to work unrequited in a charity ward or some public hospital and goes to give services for which the wealthy pay fabulous sums. In fact, such a practice has so grown that it is almost a necessity for every doctor to do a great deal of charity work.

The life of the poorest man is just as valuable to that man as is living, comfort and health to the wealthy. The difference is that one can pay for and one cannot, so the medical fraternity, in recognition of its high calling, has gradually grown to regard it a duty to be performed, even if remuneration is anticipated.

A growing man gasps at a straw; a sick patient is grateful, whether gratitude is expressed; but after all, the blessing is in the giving and receiving.

BAB DOESN'T LIKE HASH OR TURNED DOWN LOVE

In New Comedy Made From Mary Roberts Rinehart's Story

Hash and turned-down lovers are two things in the world that Bab, the sweet little creature in Mary Roberts Rinehart's story, does not like. "I eat hash at school, but I don't have to pretend to like it," pipes Helen Hayes as Bab in the comedy of that name at Carter Brooks, whom Bab thinks is hopelessly in love with her sister, Leila Archibald.

Bab resents the schoolgirl treatment she receives from her good old dad, her mother, her sister and above all, the brotherly attitude displayed by Carter. Bab's little heart calls out for a low-cut evening gown with a "V" in front her—germ or no germ. Then Bab's troubles begin. Her mother insists that she remember she is just a girl in her teens and that little girls do not attend the group parties of their elder sisters who have just "come out." Bab decides to stage a big frame-up and pretend that she has a "lover" by the name of Harold Valentine. She gets a picture of an actor and pretends that he is her Romeo and that she is his soul-mate. The deception is carried out successfully until Carter "gets wise" and decides to break up the "affair" by bringing the actor on the scene under the name of Harold Valentine. Then

Roberts Rinehart, and the play in real life. She handles scenes of the play with touch and a splendid youth, which many women who are her elders, would possess. She is the idyllic Bab, and no one could better and very few could make of her when it comes life blood into the play story.

The supporting cast is really Sam Edwards as Bab's father; Tom H. Brooks, who loved Bab; and Elfred as Carter. Finally Leila is played by Helen Hayes as Guy Gros. Believe Harold Valentine is a picture of a man who had with an uncontrolled front. The remainder been wisely selected.

The play has been by George C. Tyler. Opinion—If you want perfect evening in the not pass up Helen Hayes and fathers should see it and sons to see it. Daughters are too old and mother, then let it and let "Bab" take a miss by those who are for 100 per cent entertainment.
