upon the rapid flight of time, but his audience didn't seem to think so.

Atlas Peck took his watch to pieces this week and has got it to running again per cent of the credit business at a period of this kind is never collected, therefore the merchant, in order to protect himself, must charge credit customers more for their goods than a cash customer. Get me? But he cannot charge anything like 20 per cent more, nor can he get away with a 10 per cent charge. The extra charge is very small unless it is a strictly credit establishment.
