

OPEN SESSIONS OF CONFERENCE NOT PROBABLE

Disarmament Sessions May Receive Wide Publicity,
However.

BORAH IS CONTENDER

Special to Indiana Daily Times
and Philadelphia Public Ledger.
WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—A serious effort is to be made for open sessions at the forthcoming disarmament conference.

Scores of letters received by Senator William E. Borah, following his Asbury Park address, in which he denounced vigorously the secret diplomacy of the past, have led him to feel there is something more than a mere academic theory of disarmament involved in the procedure of the discussions. He has been surprised agreeably at the lay interest and the active support for any move looking to publicity.

It is probable a nonpartisan discussion of the whole matter will be indulged in in the Senate on the conclusion of the recess. The process will be a resolution expressing the sentiment of the Senate. It will be on a different footing from the Harrison amendment to an appropriation bill. That proposal to withhold funds for the conference unless the American commissioners were committed to an inelastic advocacy of open sessions did not find favor even with the demands.

SPECIAL WRITERS IN GREAT NUMBERS

The Harding Administration will undertake to establish the frankest sort of relationship with the American public during the progress of the conversations. An unprecedented number of newspaper men will be on hand. The great corps of reporters at the national political convention, at the Dempsey-Carpenter fight, even at the Paris peace conference, will not stand in comparison with the body of special writers to be here. Arrangements are being made for a minimum of 400 visiting correspondents to supplement the 250 men assigned regularly to Washington. Japan alone will have seventy-five special writers on the scene.

It is the hope of the President and Secretary of State Hughes to keep the American people informed as to the progress of the discussions through and in time, though perhaps informal, relation with the American correspondents. They believe the demands of sincere opponents of another such orgy of silence as Mr. Wilson permitted at Paris will be met fully by the methods to be adopted. They are firm in their opposition to any American insistence on absolutely public sessions, not only of the conference, but of all committees or committees of the kind under it. Their position is the familiar one that you can't write a treaty at a town mass meeting.

BORAH TO STAND FOR OPEN DISCUSSION

Senator Borah is regarded as likely to contend in the Senate debates that while it is true public discussions of world political problems would be conducive to democracy and propaganda, there is a greater menace in the intrigue which are born in every secret discussion. His answer to the contention that treaties may not be written under the gaze of the public most likely will be that the world is weary of the sort of treaties which have been prepared without thought to the public interest.

In response to an editorial campaign by editor and publisher, a New York publication devoted to the interests of newspapers, editors and writers in the United States, Great Britain and Japan have endorsed the proposal for open sessions and that effort to impress the White House is going forward in spite of official administration expressions in opposition.

SENATORS TO ENTER BROAD DISCUSSION

The return of the Senate after its recess is expected by the party leaders to result in a broad discussion of all manner of issues from Mingo to free trade. Administration managers believe the visit home will have a most beneficial effect. They count on Senators hearing the public wants—not so much talk, but some real action on legislation that may contribute to the revival of business. They are hopeful, therefore, of a minimum of delay over the railroad, taxation and war loan refunding bills.

Prolonged discussion of the personnel of the American disarmament commission or the procedure of the conference, it is held, would be fatal to the party's legislative program.—Copyright, 1921, by Public Ledger Company.

IN THE REALM WHERE WOMAN REIGNS

Keeping House With the Hoopers

(The Hoopers, an average American family of five, living in a suburban town, on a limited income, will tell the readers of the Daily Times how the many present-day problems of the home are solved by working on the budget that Mrs. Hooper has evolved and found practical. Follow them daily in an interesting review of their home life and learn to meet the conditions of the high cost of living with them.)

TUESDAY

Mrs. Hooper and Henry had come as near to quarrelling as they had ever done during the course of their married life. Henry was a man of few words and he hated arguments so it was rather difficult for Mrs. Hooper to get him to return to it again when they were sitting together on the porch after the children had gone upstairs to bed. He showed no inclination to take back what he had said in regard to himself and the children being rendered rather inadequate by Mrs. Hooper's superlative efficiency.

His complaint had come like a bolt out of the clear sky, as he had never before voiced the slightest criticism of her hobby for managing a home on a business basis. In fact, he had praised everything she had done for so long that she could scarcely believe that he was now pointing out something that he considered a very serious flaw in her perfectly fitted system.

All the morning, while she was doing the washing, which was unusually large because of the accumulated clothes at home together with all the soiled ones from the camping trip, she kept growing more and more angry at what she considered Henry's unwarranted attack on her methods. He had agreed with her that her planning was wonderful, and that she had always showed the greatest consideration for him in consulting him, whenever money was to be spent for anything out of the ordinary, and that there was absolutely nothing arbitrary in her decisions as to how their income was to be spent, but when she pressed him as to what he had meant when he said that he also felt inefficient on occasions, he confessed that it was his belief that if anything happened to her that he would have no more idea of how to keep things going than John Briggs, whom they were always joking because he had such a shrewish wife.

"You do everything so perfectly yourself, Mary," he had said rather helplessly, "and things run so smoothly in the house that I never exert myself to discover how it is all done. It is as if I were travelling on a smoothly sailing ship as a passenger. If I were suddenly called to the bridge to take the ship's place in mid-ocean, I should certainly sink the ship, because I wouldn't know the first thing about handling or steering gear. But," he had continued, "it really doesn't make much sense of a great deal of difference about me. Only I do want to make you see its effect on the children."

This more she thought about what Henry had said the more abused she felt, and when she came back into the laundry after hanging out the clothes, she sat down on the low stool beside the washing machine and had a good cry—something she hadn't done in years. After that she pulled herself together and went upstairs to prepare the children's luncheon. Roger and Helen had returned to school in the morning and Baby Betty was still at the seashore with her grandmother, so that the house was as quiet and restful as it had been during the two weeks that the family were away. She herself had suggested the vacation that was to separate Henry and herself, for the first time in many years, with the idea that it would do both of them good. And after all, it had only resulted in this complication, bringing with it the first dissatisfaction Henry had ever expressed over anything she did.

"Hopelessly dependent," was what he had said of Roger. She couldn't believe it! But it was equally surprising what he had said of Helen. "Amazingly short and efficient, but timid," had been his report of this little household rebel. And to blame her when she had been giving every bit of energy she possessed, as well as every waking hour to planning for the children's welfare, was too much.

She was almost on the verge of tears again when Roger and Helen came dashing in for lunch and Roger looked at her suspiciously several times during the meal, as if sensing that something was wrong with his usually cheery mother.

GINGERBREAD

One cupful of New Orleans molasses;
one cupful of sugar; one cupful of sour cream; one small cupful of butter; three eggs; three cupfuls of flour; one teaspoonful each of cloves, cinnamon, ginger and baking soda; the last dissolved in a little hot water. Bake in two loaves in a moderate oven.

VEAL LOAF

Put three pounds of raw veal and one fourth pound of salt pork through the meat chopper; add to this one teaspoonful of fine bread crumbs, one tablespoonful of butter, three beaten eggs to which four tablespoonfuls of cream have been added, one teaspoonful of pepper, three teaspoonfuls of salt and two teaspoonfuls of powdered sage. Mix well together and form into a loaf. Bake in a mold two and a half hours, basting with butter and water.

CABINET PUDDING

Butter a pudding mold and sprinkle the bottom with chopped raisins, citron and currants; add a layer of sponge cake and sprinkle lightly with ground cinnamon and cloves. Alternate these layers until the mold is almost full. Beat four eggs until light, add one quart of milk and a little salt and four teaspoonfuls of melted butter. Pour over the cake. Let it stand one hour and then steam for one and a half hours and serve with a currant jelly sauce.

PUSS IN BOOTS JR.

By David Cory

Well, it made little Puss Junior very happy to have Jack and the Maiden all forlorn that milked the cow with the crumpled horn so glad to see him once more, for you know how nice it is to meet old friends and have them glad to see you. But Puss didn't stay long. Oh, my no! He soon said good-by and started off once more through dear Old Mother Goose Land, and before he had gone far he saw his old friend, the Good Gray Horse. He was grazing in a meadow close by, when he saw Puss he gave a loud neigh and jumped over the fence. "Hello, little Master, Where have you been so long? In field and lane I've looked in vain, And called to you in song."

"Let me get on your back and I will tell you as we jog along," said little Puss Junior with a grin, and then he jumped lightly on the good horse's back, and away they went together just as they used to do, oh, so many stories ago, before Puss went to Fairy Land and the Country of the Gods.

Well, by and by, after a while, they came to a great forest, and as it was getting late, Puss thought it would be wiser not to go any further, so he looked about him for a place to spend the night. And not very far away, among the trees, he saw a little light shining through the dark. So, taking the bridle in his paw, he led the Good Gray Horse into the forest and pretty soon they reached a little hut, from a small window in which shone a tiny light.

Well, Puss stepped up to the door and gave three knocks, and pretty soon it opened and the Three Little Kittens who had lost their mittens, all said at once: "Why, here is Puss Junior, The most famous of kittens, Let us tell him at once That we all found our mittens."

"Well, I'm glad to hear that," laughed Puss. "But, tell me, do you think you can put me up for the night and give my Good Gray Horse some oats?"

"Of course we can," cried all the little kittens at once. And then Tom went out to the stable and fed the Good Gray Horse, and Tabby hung Puss Junior's cap on a peg, and the third little kitten, whose name was Judy, got the supper ready.

And after supper they all sat around the table, and Puss told them how he had been to Japan and ridden in a rickshaw, and to India, and had ridden on an elephant's back. He told them all about his trip to China and how he had ridden the big farm buffalo with the little Chinese boy.

And, oh, dear me! I wish I could remember what else he related; but I guess he told them about Egypt and the camel ride and the Magic Airship. And when he finished, the little Cuckoo came out of her clock and commenced to sing: "It's ten o'clock and time for bed. So get your nightcap on your head. And take your candle in your hand And start at once for Dreamy Land." And in the next story you shall hear what happened after that.—Copyright, 1921.

LEGION DARES U. S. CHAMBER TO A WRANGLE

Calls Hand of National Body on 'Bonus' Statement.

Special to Indiana Daily Times
and Philadelphia Public Ledger.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—The American Legion has challenged the United States Chamber of Commerce to a series of joint debates on the merits of soldiers' "bonus" legislation. The challenge was issued in an open letter, written by the legislative committee of the legion, inviting representatives of the chamber to meet officers of the legion in any and every city of the country.

"You say the adjusted compensation or 'bonus bill' is misunderstood," said the letter. "Now the legion is willing and anxious to do its share in making it understood and to abide by the consequences. Is the Chamber of Commerce of the United States like-minded or is it determined to continue its pussy-foot campaign of pamphleteering?"

Officers of the legion explained their regard the debate proposal as the best method of combating the propaganda, which they asserted the Chamber of Commerce is directing against the bonus. "Representing or supposedly representing big business," said John Thomas Taylor, vice chairman of the legislative committee, "the chamber has made itself spokesman for not only the opposition to the cash bonus payment feature of the bill, but other features of it, including those features the national convention of the chamber approved.

"In its latest fulmination against adjusted compensation—a twelve-page printed pamphlet, teeming with inaccuracies, misrepresentations and absurdities, the chamber so outdoes all its previous efforts in its campaign of falsehood and slander as to arouse the indignation of the great mass of men who put on the uniform in the late war while members of the chamber were putting on profiteering, oth is and out of the legion, among all ex-service men, there is a widespread feeling that the chamber's statements should not be permitted to go unchallenged.—Copyright, 1921, by Public Ledger Company.
