The Truth About Indianapolis

SERUMS AND VACCINES

INDIANAPOLIS serums, vaccines and bacterins with a retail value each year of between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 are used all over the world to prevent and treat diphtheria, typhoid, smallpox, tetanus (lock jaw), tuberculosis and other diseases in humans; cholera in hogs, blackleg in cattle and sheep, and many other diseases of animals. In addition, the city now furnishes many glandular products, such as those of the thyroid gland, used in modern disease control.

Horses, pigs, hogs, guinea pigs, rabbits, white mice, calves and cattle are used in the production of these serums, vaccines and bacterins. Some of these Indianapolis-made products are so superior that in some states and foreign countries they have been specified for exclusive use by the authorities. An even dozen Indianapolis plants give all or part of their energies to the production of these products.
