Wall Street View Lends Encouragement to Trade Prospects for New Year

By MONITOR.

NEW YORK, Jan. 2.

In these tempestuous times each year seems to have distinguishing characteristics that set it apart from its predecessors.

Nineteen-nineteen was pre-eminently its post-bellum inflation. Nineteen-twenty was distinguished for the violence of the deflation that corrected much of the reckless extravagance that developed during the war and immediately afterward.

The year just closed has been a period of constructive readjustment, involving the termination of the deflation movement and the beginning of the recovery.

Prophecy is a hazardous role, even when its syllable predictions are based under the modest title of forecast. Nevertheless, the student of financial and business conditions will find much to encourage him in the outlook for 1922.

For business, perhaps the most promising gradual, progress toward stable and satisfactory conditions. In all but a few respects it contains the elements for the staunchest optimism.

It will be a year of steady, although possibly gradual, progress toward stable and satisfactory conditions. In all but a few respects it contains the elements for the staunchest optimism.

In taking this hopeful view it is not necessary to indulge in intemperate predictions of a boom. The time has not come when that suggestion is warranted. The economic condition is of too recent and painful memory to indulge in such robust sport. If an attempt were made to outline the peculiar trend of development in the closing months of the previous year, the resultant picture would be roughly this: There will be increasing prosperity with profits dependent more on efficiency of operation, the institution of needed economies and lowered production costs than on the volume of business or the attempt to increase returns through the agency of extreme price advances. If this view should prove correct, the closing months of the previous year could mark 1922 as one of the most useful.

The wage schedules in the coal-mining industry and the building trades must be adjusted, but the recovery is to continue. The burning of corn for fuel gives indisputable proof of the destructive maladjustment between our production and our great agricultural industry cannot be expected to provide war-time wages to certain organized groups whose answer to the demand for a fair contribution to the program of readjustment is to demand a 25 percent wide fuel famine or transport tie-up. These are the ugly phases of the situation. They cannot be dodged or ignored. The composite intelligence and courage of the American people, and granting a minimum of political interference, the tendency would be in the direction of gradual readjustment and satisfactory settlement. After all, they are questions of the public, not of capital or labor—to settle, the experience, as well as the temperament of the American people, gives basis for general optimism. The details by which our problems are to be solved are within the range of our vision—Copyright, 1921, by the Public Ledger Company.
