

TAKES HER OWN LIFE, BUT SAVES HER DAUGHTER

Woman Prepares for Death,
Then Sends Bullet Into Her Heart.

Special to The Times.
BLOOMINGTON, Jan. 17.—Eighteen-year-old Ethylene Englewood sat up in bed and saved her life by pleading with her mother not to pull the trigger of a revolver.

The mother Mrs. Stella Englewood, armed she could not bear to commit suicide and leave her girl behind. The muzzle of the gun was pressed against Ethylene's breast. She would have been shot to death had she not been awake when the mother entered her room.

Ethylene left the house and returning found Mrs. Englewood on the floor with a bullet through her heart. The insurance policies had been placed on a table and some hot water was on the stove for the undertaker for whom she expressed a preference in a note.

WOMEN VOTERS ISSUE CALL FOR NATIONAL EVENT

Pan-American Conference to Join With Convention
April 20 to 29.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—The call to the third annual convention of the National League of Women Voters and the Pan American Conference of Women, to be held in Baltimore, Md., from April 20 to 29, has just been issued by the board of directors from the league's Washington office and reads:

"The National League of Women Voters calls its affiliated and associate members to send delegates to the third annual convention of the league at the Hotel Belvedere, Baltimore, from April 24 to 29.

"The league calls women from all the Americas to meet in conference from April 20 to 23 on subjects of special concern to women—education, child welfare, women in industry, prevention of traffic in women, civil and political status of women and international friendliness.

PEACE AMONG NATIONS FIRST.

"Peace among nations is essential to the work that women have most at heart. A definite step toward the maintenance of peace has been taken by the conference on the limitation of armaments. The National League of Women Voters has borne its full share of responsibility for making known to the conference the profound hope of the people of this land that war may cease. But this hope can never be wholly realized until friendly cooperation for common ends takes the place of international rivalry. The league believes that friendship with our neighbor countries will be stimulated and strengthened if women from all parts of the Western Hemisphere gather for sympathetic study of their common problems.

"In the third annual convention of the league its members, rejoicing over the successes of the past year and earnestly mindful of the things that are yet to be done, will have opportunity to determine together their plans for the coming year. The league needs the counsel of all its workers.

"Its usefulness has been made clear. Its field of service is wide. It has faith in the ideals of government by the people and zeal for their fulfillment. Its goal of intelligent, conscientious, effective citizenship will be won only by wisdom and conservation.

"The league calls you to come and give of your best."

PAN-AMERICAN CONFERENCE SCHEDULE.

In including as part of its convention the Pan American Conference of Women the league is but carrying out its purpose expressed in its constitution "to promote education in citizenship and the public discussion of civic reforms." Mrs. Maud Wood Park, president of the league, said in her address that "women's distinctive interests—home-making, children, human welfare—are cooperative and in no sense competitive. What is the common interest of one country have learned concerning these vital subjects is equally helpful to the women of every other country. In 'pooling' women's knowledge of the subjects in which they have a common interest all are benefited. Besides this, there is created a friendliness, a sense of cordiality, through mutual understanding of these problems that affect us all. This has been recognized in the cordial cooperation we have had from the State Department."

Women are evincing great interest in the Pan-American conference and acceptance of the invitation sent by the league through the United States Department of State to the governments of South and Central America, Mexico, Canada, Cuba, Porto Rico and Haiti are already being received at the league headquarters in Washington.

Lady Nancy Astor, chairman of the consultative committee of women's organizations of England, in a letter to Mrs. Maud Wood Park, president of the National League of Women Voters, has sent the expressed opinion of thirty-two national women's groups of England in a resolution on disarmament adopted on Nov. 24, 1921.

LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS IS URGED.

The resolution reads:

"That the undermentioned societies, believing that great armies and navies are a menace to the peace of the world and an unwarrantable burden on the people, urge His Majesty's government to do all in its power to achieve general limitation of armaments, by agreement on the matter with other nations and by promoting a policy of international cooperation whereby the security of states may be assured without resort to force. They further urge that the British representatives at Washington and within the League of Nations advocate this policy, and they welcome joyfully the expression of convictions akin to their own from the women of America."

The letter accompanying the resolution is signed by Lady Astor, chairman and president; by Miss Picton-Turberville, vice chairman, and by Lady Galway, secretary of the consultative committee.

Expressing the appreciation of the League of Women Voters for the cordial words of cooperation embodied in the resolution, Mrs. Park in her reply extends a cordial invitation to Lady Astor to attend the Pan American Conference of Women, which is to meet in connection with the third annual convention of the league next April "with the idea that such a conference will have a definite helpful effect upon international friendliness."

"It gives me pleasure," writes Mrs. Park, "to extend to you a cordial invitation to attend this conference and help us further the feeling of friendly cooperation between the women of Canada, the United States and the republics of South and Central America."

"We earnestly hope that you can be with us and we feel that your presence will be especially helpful because the women of America still lovingly claim you even while they take pride in the recognition which the land of your adoption has given you."

Men You May Marry

By ETHEL R. PEYSER

Has a man like this proposed to you?

Symptoms: Never so happy as when he has a bunch of girls around to whom he can deliver a speech on the day's topics or on the stage or on the latest things in architecture. He does know a lot, but he loves to make himself out to be the oracle of the day. He is interesting, good looking, well groomed and prosperous, yet his little lectures often get on the nerves of those who feel he lacks originality. He is awfully likable and people gather around him mostly to satisfy him.

IN FACT

He is delightfully easy to satisfy.

MYRA'S FINGERS

By A. R. FARLEIGH

EDITOR'S NOTE—Can the living communicate with the dead? This fascinating tale deals with that big question. It is a skillful piece of entertainment, filled with surprising twists and vivid as a three-act play. Spirit connection becomes an aid in untangling an apparently unsolvable mystery. The story is different from the kind you usually read, and will be altogether worth while. Start at beginning and read each installment in order.

CHAPTER I.

Myra's fingers were held warmly in Arthur's hands. Miss Campion had not expected that Mr. Brownson would take such an advantage of the medium's order to touch hands lightly on the table in the dim room. She was sure his other hand did not press as closely. The thrill she felt at contact warned her to withdraw them gently, but that she would have broken the circle. So she was glad he could not see her color ebb and flow to the flux and reflux of his unconscious pressure. No word of love had been spoken between them, but they understood—Myra understood and was happy.

She scoffed when her mother urged her to attend Mrs. Atwater's last session in Chicago before her departure to New York.

"Only try to believe, daughter. If you knew the consolation I receive from the Beyond."

"Yes, mother, if I try hard enough, I know I will hear a message like you."

"No, dear, I do not hear messages. I feel them while I live. I am not clairvoyant. I am clairvoyant."

"A name?" the medium murmured. "Yes? Nylle?"

No one seemed to understand. Mrs. Atwater went on in gasping staccato questions.

"A message to Nylle? No? Is the name Nylle? Do I hear Nylle? Nylle?"

"Her fingers?"

"The adverse influence is increasing. A woman—fingers—Nylle? Oh, Nylle?"

Arthur felt Mrs. Farnham sit erect, heard her whisper, tremulous:

"I see him. It is from her father to Myra. Myra's fingers."

The girl could stand it no longer. To her it was all imposture. She snapped her fingers from Arthur and burst into a peal of laughter. The magic circle was broken. The spirits fled. A blaze of light illumined the room. Clients blinked into one another's faces. The medium awoke with a gasp.

"What is it?" she cried. "The adverse influence has broken the circle."

Mrs. Farnham's eyes were set, her figure lax. She could not stand.

"Your father," she said to the girl. "I saw him. He has passed Beyond and we did not know. What does the message portend?"

The medium bustled to her speaking volubly, rapidly, precluding all questions.

"You will know in time, Mrs. Farnham. Communications come that way. They are vague and mysterious. Light comes as we meditate. You are clairvoyant. You have a great gift. Seek to put yourself under the control of Benjamin and you will understand. The message was probably for your daughter, but you must be her interpreter."

CHAPTER II.

This session was in July, 1919. Arthur walked to their apartment. Myra was amused by her mother's bewilderment.

"Don't worry, dear," she said. "The message should have promised a few thousand dollars for Myra's fingers so I could support us both while I build up a practice as an M. D." She was surprised.

Mrs. Farnham sighed. She was a small wisp of a woman, always in black, though Myra knew of no deaths to mourn. The girl had discovered one day in Indianapolis, when she was only 16, that her mother was straining body and mind, as a dressmaker, to keep her at school. She announced the next day that she had gone to work in a medical publishing concern. She was supporting them both and had money in the bank. Her mother, with a mind as wispy as her body, had given up the long, wearying struggle and kept her worn, rusty eyes on the life beyond, tired out, not unwilling soon to welcome her own translation.

"It was a pretty message—Myra's fingers—whatever its meaning," said Arthur. "What did your vision look like Mrs. Farnham?"

"Mother can not describe her vision. I wish I had seen him. I do not recollect my father."

"If it could not have been her, the medium said he had just entered the Beyond. If you don't remember him he must have been there a long time."

Neither answered. They were embarrassed.

"I am sorry," said Arthur. "Perhaps I have called up sad memories."

"No," answered Myra. "My father is not dead."

"Your father is dead," exclaimed her mother quickly.

"But mother, you never told me—"

"I would not have known, myself, if I had not seen him and received his message."
