Wrestling Fans Get Chance to See Champ Lewis and His Headlock.

LOS ANGELES, March 7.—"Let your conscience be your guide. It's nobody's business if I want to swear, smoke and drink so long as my heart is right." This is the religion of James J. Jeffries, as expounded by him in his first sermon—a prayer last night in the Church of an obscure sect located in an office building, within a block of Jeff's former Spring street bar.

Just before he stepped to the rostrum a 14-year-old prodigy, equipped with a bass voice, did some singing. Jeff stood behind a piano at the rear of the church, smoking cigarettes and cackling an admiring eye at the prodigy from behind the brim of a loud-checked cap which he wore jerked down over his brows.

Meanwhile Dick Ferris, prominent sporting man and old time pal of Jeff when he was knocking them cold in the ring, passed through the congregation distributing religious tracts.

Friends of the former champion allied the hall, the trophy being an invitational affair. Hundreds of persons were turned away. They milled around the doors struggling to get into the church as fast as they could to see him administer the knockout to some pugilist.

When it came time for Jeff to step to the platform, he flicked his cigarette into a corner, and the crowd of men and women strode up the aisle. Jeff looked as bashful as a bridegroom for a minute, but a return game. The result of the opening bout of the show, Webb has been promised that he will be substituted for the second round if he should furnish a lot of action for the fans.
