HARDING KEEPS HANDS OFF IN TREASURY ROW

Mellon Will Probably Stay, but Dover May Resign as a Result.

WASHINGTON, May 29.—President Harding decided, temporarily at least, to keep hands off in the Treasury patronage row.

It was learned, authoritatively, today that Secretary of the Treasury Mellon has been given virtually carte blanche authority to go ahead with his reorganization plans.

In effect, the President has waved aside the protests of Senators and Congressmen who registered strenuous protests against the action of Internal Revenue Commissioner Blair in deposing some of the appointees of Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Mellon.

The President's stand was taken to mean that a halt had been called in the Government service, as he himself expressed it, by kicking out many hold-over Democrats and supplanting them with Republicans.

It also means that Internal Revenue Commissioner Blair, storm center of numerous patronage rows in the last year will remain in control of the 20,000-odd workers in the wide-flung activities of the bureau.

The upshot of the row may mean the resignation of Mellon, it was said by his friends today, despite the fact that Mellon is a close personal friend and fellow Ohioan of the President's.

Any other decision on the part of the President could have meant Mellon's resignation, friends of the Secretary said, apparently the issue simmered down a question of Mellon or Dover, and Mellon, temporarily at least, has won the decision.

As a matter of fact, according to those on the inside of the patronage row, Secretary Mellon has offered his resignation to President Harding on three different occasions, but each time has been persuaded to withdraw it.

RADIO MUSIC REPLACES DANCE ORCHESTRA

Dancing to music from the air has been taken up in New York. It's spreading to other places. Instead of the regular orchestra, the Pennsylvania Hotel installed a large machine shaped like a phonograph and tuned in on the Newark radio broadcasting station. Dance music came over by radio. Other hotels are copying this stunt.

Static Is Cause for Scraping Sound in Receivers.

By PAUL F. GODLEY.

America's Foremost Radio Authority.

Radio fans have been puzzled during the last few weeks by noises in their receivers which have been variously described as "scraping," "scratching," and "clicking."

Many of them have jumped to the conclusion that something has gone wrong with their receivers. But the sets aren't to blame at all. The fault is entirely nature's brand of radio-static.

This is the main source of disturbance in wireless communication. Engineers for many years have diligently applied themselves in an effort to discover some way of eliminating the effects of static.

No method has yet been discovered which will entirely eliminate static, although many methods have been put forth for minimizing its effects. When several of the best devices are used simultaneously in connection with any one receiver, it is possible to get as high as 90 per cent improvement in that set.

The measures necessary to secure this improvement, however, are of a nature entirely unsuited to application on the home radio set because they are bulky and expensive.

SINGLE CIRCUIT SET.

The first means discovered for the reduction of static interference was the "tuning" of the receiver circuits. This was the next step was one where this tuning was carried still further—a second tuning circuit was added to the receiver and "coupled" weakly to the tuned antenna circuit.

A great many radio receivers in use today are of the "single circuit" type. But considerably greater freedom from static disturbances is to be had by the use of a "two-circuit" receiver.

TWO-CIRCUIT SET.

The two-circuit receivers of the three-circuit set.

The use of "regeneration" in the circuits of a vacuum tube receiver ("regenerative receiver"), where the receiver is built around the coupled circuits with an outdoor antenna, will give the greatest freedom from the interference now possible for the radio fan. Such sets are known as "three-circuit" receivers.

To go beyond this necessitates the use of a receiver in connection with a "loop" or "coil" antenna.

The coil antenna consists of a few turns of wire on a frame three or four feet square. The potential developed in it by the advancing waves are, of course, very much smaller (about 1,000 part) of what is developed in the outdoor antenna. Greater amplification—more vacuum tubes, batteries, etc.—are necessary where such an antenna is used, and this means more expense.

Service Rendered by Co-operation

ONE of the most perfect forms of industrial service is that which results from co-operation between manufacturer and consumer.

Recognizing this, the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) has developed a service bureau headed by lubricating engineers of wide experience whose business it is to co-operate with designers, manufacturers and users of all types of machinery that they may get a maximum of correct lubrication at a minimum of cost.

In developing this service the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) had a two-fold motive—first that Standard Oil products shall render the utmost of service and second that the user shall get full value for the money he spends.

As a result of this service the customer finds it unnecessary to carry on costly experiments. The lubricating specialists of the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) will, upon request, study his problems and tell him the exact oils and greases needed to insure correct lubrication of his machinery.

This highly specialized service is rendered without cost. It is one of the underlying principles of this Company that the customer must be given the benefit of our wide experience, that his lubricating costs per year may be as low as possible.

In the individual plants, large and small, which the lubricating engineers of the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) have served, this principle is well recognized.

Plenty of oil does not necessarily mean good lubrication. Correct lubrication consists in applying the right oil in the right place in the right way.

To enable its patrons to achieve correct lubrication is the business of the lubricating engineers of the Standard Oil Company (Indiana).

This lubrication service is but one of the many specialized ways in which the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) serves industry and hence serves society.
