

Proper Inductance Coil Adds Efficiency to Set

By PAUL F. GODLEY.
America's Foremost Radio Authority.
Uniformity of operation and the effectiveness of a radio receiver are in a great measure dependent upon the care used in the construction, as well as the design, of those units which go to make up the whole.
Those who build their own outfits in most cases go wrong when making the simplest piece of radio equipment—the inductance coil.
Losses within the radio circuit result not only in weaker signals but also in lack of selectivity—the ability to tune one station in and another out.
Even with the most common materials at hand, a fairly good radio coil can be built without much trouble if a few precautions are taken.
The form upon which the winding is placed must be moisture proof.
A cardboard tube will do—if it is dried in the oven. While still warm apply a coat of shellac. Dry again and then give it another coat—both inside the tube and out.
When you are sure that the tube is dry, start winding.

Good Cooking Makes Camp Much More Like Home

By DAN BEARD,
National Scout Commissioner.

Going camping, you fellows? Every live boy goes camping nowadays. It is wonderful how the camping habit got hold of people about the time scouting came into existence, and how, year after year, more and more people, especially boys, have gone off into the woods and had a bully time.

In my day the fellows who went camping were real adventurers, camping was more of an adventure (with the ad left off) than it is today. That's because we fellows who know how to camp have been writing more and more about the right way to camp, so that people now have a pretty good idea of the theory of camping anyhow.

Very well, if you are going camping, who is going to be camp cook? You are? Good! I suppose you know all about how to cook, eh?

Hope you do, for the sake of the rest of the fellows. But in case you are just a little rusty on the "how" of the thing, let me give you some advice:
Let your cooking fire be small. I have done better cooking over a fire, or bed of live coals no larger than the area of your two hands than I have over a big roaring fire that scorched my face.

The Indians built small fires and got close to them to cook and keep warm. The white men who had not learned woodcraft from the Indians you do, you and your chums will soon get sick from too much grease. You'll all have indigestion, too. The best way to cook meat in the woods is to broil it. Do not try to broil over flames. Make a good hot fire and let it burn down to coals, then broil over the coals.

Almost any kind of meat, from built big fires that scorched their shins and made them keep away from the blaze.

In camp do not fry everything. If chicken to fish, can be successfully broiled. If the meat has no fat on it, baste it with bacon; that is, pin strips of bacon to it with slivers of wood and the grease from the bacon will furnish enough juice to brown the meat or fish to a crisp tasty condition.

If you are going to be camp cook, sit down about a week before you go to camp and figure out every meal in advance. Get variety in the meals. Don't run a camp like the old-time boarding house, where they had hash three times a day.

In the diagram are some wrinkles that you and the rest of your chums can work out around camp to make the place comfortable.

Tomorrow Dan Beard tells you a new camp wrinkle worth while.

SLEUTHS SLEUTHLY SLEUTH
Best of City Detectives Trail Missing Watermelon—Suspect Boys.

The most sleuthsome sleuths of the Indianapolis detective department today followed a clue in solving the mystery which surrounds the robbing of the ice chest of Mrs. Edward Ent, 2720 E. New York St., Sunday. A watermelon, a canteloupe, milk and cheese were stolen.

Two small boys who, according to people in the neighborhood, acted suspiciously, were seen in the vicinity of the home about ten minutes after the time the robbery is supposed to have occurred.
They were eating watermelon.
