

ENGLISH LORDS DIFFER IN VIEW OF RECENT NOTE

Horne and Chamberlain Said to Have Fears of Effect on United States.

GEDDES MORE CONFIDENT

Lloyd George Abandons Neutral Stand and Urges Dispatch to States.

By RALPH H. TURNER
United Press Staff Correspondent.
LONDON, Aug. 2.—Great Britain's proposed international cancellation of war debts among the governments of the world, it is learned, is the result of weeks of deliberation in the cabinet, where sharply divergent opinions developed as to the desirability of taking such a position.

Sir Robert Horne, chancellor of the exchequer, and Austen Chamberlain, government spokesman in Commons, took the position that a note would intensify feeling against Europe in the American Congress.

Favors Gold Shipments
Horne favored heavy gold shipments, so that the United States, suddenly flooded with gold, would see the disadvantage of upsetting trade balances.

The Earl of Balfour, acting foreign secretary during the illness of Lord Curzon, is understood to have drafted the note. Winston Churchill, minister of colonies, was strongly in favor of issuing the note declaring it would appeal to the American sense of justice.

Sir Auckland Geddes, the British ambassador at Washington, said he did not believe the note would outrage American opinion and that it might in fact have a salutary effect.

Lloyd George Yields
Premier Lloyd George, after being thus advised regarding the probable effect in the United States, abandoned the neutral position, he had been holding and supported Balfour's action.

The note points out that the money owed to Great Britain, including that owed by Germany and Russia, amounts to about $17,000,000,000—at the normal rate of Anglo-American exchange—whereas Great Britain owes the United States, with interest since 1919, about one quarter of that sum, $4,250,000,000.

Shuffelbarger told the same story about the party except he said nothing of the hypodermic needle, but said a man had insulted his wife. This man and Shuffelbarger had a fight the police were told.

Shuffelbarger said he would swear out a warrant for the man's arrest.

Babies Life of Photograph Business, Flappers Not So Vain As Parents

By NORA KAY
Anti-flapperists who blame the younger feminine generation for most of the vanities and extravagances of the present day will, no doubt, hear with surprise that it is not the vanity of the flapper, but the pride of admiring parents that keeps the photograph business going, according to a photographer who has been making some observations on folk who come to his studio.

"If it wasn't for the babies we would have to go out of business," he said. "From the time they are big enough to take out until they are 3 or 4 years old the parents can't seem to get too many pictures of them. And the only reason most of them stop then, is because they have another to start making pictures of."

"The flappers come in a poor second to the babies. They have some pictures taken when they leave high school, and again when they fall in love—fatally, I mean. We can always tell how serious it is when the girl comes in first, tries to look her prettiest and has her picture taken, and then a little later comes back again, dragging the reluctant young man to be photographed.

"Usually after this happens it is only a matter of months until we take a picture of the wedding party. And after that—it is only a year or so before we get back to where our business started—with the baby."
