'Ban Flirting,' Urges Reformer; 'Keep It Up,' Cries Business Girl

James Madison, Head of the Anti-Flirting Crusade, and Evelyn Boyd Who Maintains Flirting Is Desirable and Necessary Under Modern City Conditions.

NEW YORK, Dec. 2.—Shall making goo-goo eyes become a felony? Shall the delicate silken parasol, traditional instrument of flirtation,

By JAMES MADISON
Leader and Founder, Anti-Flirt Crusade

The aim of the Anti-Flirt Crusade is to show through the medium of propaganda and publicity the evil effect flirtation has on modern society.

We plan to establish an organization that will have branches in every city, an organization whose far-reaching influence will make all city streets safe for our daughters.

The sooner the flirt is quashed, the sooner we shall restore to our younger generation the better and sweeter things in life.

The present wave of flirtation is caused by giving our boys and girls too much leeway. We must educate them and their parents to the seriousness of the situation.

We shall collect no fees or dues although individual subscriptions already have been donated and are in actual use today.

But what we do need and ask is the full moral support of the whole American public.

be banned as a dangerous weapon? Shall the flirt, both male and female, either be reformed or driven from our midst?

"Yes!" shouts James Madison, who has initiated a Nation-wide anti-flirt crusade.

But opposition has developed. "We're going to flirt!" declares an adventurous band of young people, especially those in great cities.

By EVELYN BOYD
New York Business Girl

Many of the nicest fellows I know I met through flirting.

Times have changed since cities were small and social events were purely home affairs where a girl had plenty of chances to meet nice boys.

In New York today a single house to a family is possible only for the rich. And apartment house landlords object to parties which annoy other tenants.

So girls and young men must seek their amusement away from home—and hence the modern value of flirting.

There's another factor in it, too. Flirting holds less danger for the modern girl because she's better able to take care of herself. Her active participation in business and other phases of life outside the home have brought that about.

Flirting, though frowned on for centuries, has persisted—and it will persist despite the present movement against it.

HEARSE SMASHED; DRIVER INJURED

Train Crashes Into Funeral Car—Watchman Forgets Signal.

When a watchman at the State Ave. crossing of the C. I. & W. and Pennsylvania Railroad tracks failed to lower the gates yesterday afternoon, C. I. & W. passenger train No. 30, crashed into a hearse driven by Henry C. Volking, 55, undertaker, 702 Virginia Ave. Volking was injured about the body and head.

The coffin, in which was the body of Mrs. Goldie Garlo, wife of Joseph Garlo, 333 S. Randolph St., was demolished. The engine struck the rear of the hearse, which turned over. The body of Mrs. Garlo was still in the wrecked hearse, but the casket was crushed around the body.

In the hand of Mrs. Garlo was a white rose, placed there by her mother Mrs. Eva Milroy. Not even a petal of the rose was crushed.

Just before the hearse reached the track, a large automobile in which the minister and six women pallbearers were riding, crossed the track in safety.

Witnesses said the gates were not lowered and that there was no warning bell ringing at the time the funeral procession started to cross the tracks. W. J. Dodd, 58, 2137 Lexington Ave., watchman, witnesses told the police, was on the ladder leading to the tower when the accident occurred. Dodd, when asked why he did not sound a warning, told the police that his attention was directed to the funeral procession and that he forgot about the approaching train. Dodd was arrested on a charge of criminal neglect.

Mike Ryan, 57, of Cincinnati, Ohio, was engineer of the train, and Burt Talbott, 54, 412 E. Walnut St., conductor.

LITTLE THEATRE TO REVIVE 'DAD'

The Little Theatre plan to foster Hoosier drama, so auspiciously begun with its prize-play competition, is further evidenced by its announcement for holiday season, a revival of Max Parry's three-act comedy of Hoosier home life, "Dad," to be given two performances at the Masonic Temple on Thursday and Friday, Dec. 23 and 24.

"Dad" was first produced by the Little Theatre at the Art Institute in December, 1915, when it ran for several months. The present version is the author's revision prepared just before he left for the front in France, where he was killed in the air behind the German lines, July 8, 1918. The revival is in celebration of his birthday, Dec. 28.

"Dad" is an intimate study of a Hoosier family dominated by a kind but autocratic father whose children, being chips off the old block, revolt one Sunday morning and, aided and abetted by their mother, stage a revolution which foxy old Dad finally has to quell by coming partway down off his high horse. Some of those who saw it seven years ago suspected the author's clever picture of the Hoosier love family was based upon intimate personal experience, but enjoyed it all the more on that account.

The revival will be directed by Horace Mitchell, himself an Indiana man, who as a professional producer has been associated with many well-known managers. George Tyler, Joseph Brooks and Henry B. Harris among the number. He directed Dustin Farnum in "The Squaw Man" and "Camelot Kirby," Robert Hilliard in "A Fool There Was," Taylor Holmes in "Bunker Bean" and was responsible for the production of "The Lion and the Mouse" and "The Poor Little Rich Girl." As an actor he early starred in "The Burglar," Augustus Thomas in first play, and was later in support of Marie Walworth and Joseph Hawthorn.
