PROPYLAEUM DISPOSAL
CONSIDERED BY MEMBERS

Some Members Wish Liquidation of Assets.

The question of the disposal of the Indianapolis Propylaeum will be taken up whenever a written request for a called meeting is presented, Mrs. Laura F. Hodges, president, said this morning. The membership is of two opinions regarding the action to be taken, it came out in a meeting of stockholders yesterday afternoon. Some of the members desire that the assets, involving more than $80,000 in cash, shall be reinvested in a new building while others are in favor of liquidating them. It is necessary for some action to be taken, because the Propylaeum building has been purchased by the city as a part of the proposed memorial site.

Life in England 800 Years Ago Reflected in Douglas Fairbanks 'Robin Hood'

By WALTER D. HICKMAN
DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS in
'Robin Hood' is headed this way.

The Circle Theater next week will become the center of King Richard and his merry court.

The engagement opens Sunday.

Although this picture is being shown in the larger cities for $2 top, the Circle next week will maintain its regular price policy.

I am told that 10,000 people appear in the various scenes and that 20,000 people were engaged in the various branches of the actual producing of the picture. This Fairbanks movie is known as the "million-dollar picture."

The story of "Robin Hood" is outlined as follows:

The story concerns the Earl of Huntington, who because of his victory over Sir Guy of Gisbourne in the great tournament, is given a high rank in the army which King Richard, the lion hearted, is to lead on a crusade to the Holy Land.

The army does not progress far when Huntington is informed in a note from Lady Marian, his betrothed, that Prince John is planning to usurp the throne of Richard. Huntington determines to return to England, and deserts the band of crusaders.

In England he forms a band of faithful and courageous followers and under the name of Robin Hood leads many attacks against the forces of the Prince.

On one of his escapades he learns that his lady fair, is imprisoned and he sets out to save her. He is captured by Prince John, however, and is about to be put to death when King Richard saves him.

The encounter then takes a turn in favor of the just cause so nobly upheld by Robin Hood, and the Prince and his forces are vanquished. Robin Hood and Lady Marian are re-united nett as Lady Marian, the heroine of the romantic story.

"Robin Hood" will be on view at the Circle next week.

and King Richard regains his throne.

The engagement opens Sunday at the Circle.

Al Jolson to Quit Chicago

With Great Record to His Credit

Al Jolson closes his engagement in Chicago Saturday night in "Bombo" after breaking all records at the Apollo Theater. He comes direct to Indianapolis with his entire company, opening Monday night at the Murat.

The box office sale indicates that Jolson will establish a new record here.

The other man's life should be considered, you may say. But I deem him not so worthy of consideration, because he is asking a married woman to break up a home.

You have to pretend for a long time. But if you have the "real stuff" in you, you will come through all right. You should not see the other man—that only reopens your wound. Instead, devote yourself to making your husband happy. And it should not surprise me if you should come to love him.

Martha Lee's Advice

A Word, a Look, a Nod May Mean Happiness or Ruin

HOW little it takes to ruin lives! Just a word, a look, may mean unhappiness.

A woman of 22 writes that, to spite the man she loved, she married a wealthy man she did not love. Now the first man wants her to tell her husband the truth and ask him to give her a divorce.

If she does not get a divorce she and her lover will be unhappy. She is to blame. But others must bear the burden with her, or perhaps alone.

Just a "yes," a nod—and lives are wrecked. We are careless of the happiness of others, and sometimes even of our own happiness.

Married for Spite

Dear Martha Lee: I have wondered over the question and asked you until it seems as though I would go crazy.

Four months ago I was married to a very wealthy man but did not love him. I wanted him but he did not want me. I have been married to him for three years. I am 22.

This man I really love is a man in the service of Uncle Sam. Now he has returned and wants to marry me. I have asked him to tell my husband the truth and ask him to give me a divorce so that I may marry him. I have asked him to do this but he says no one knows how I have suffered. I know I did wrong in marrying. My husband is very good to me. I have no reason to want except true love. TROUBLED.

Do you think you have a right to ask your husband to divorce you, and so make him unhappy? He is good to you and probably he thinks you love him. You took his happiness in your hands and I don't think you have a right now to throw it away.

The other man's life should be considered, you may say. But I deem him not so worthy of consideration, because he is asking a married woman to break up a home.

You have to pretend for a long time. But if you have the "real stuff" in you, you will come through all right. You should not see the other man—that only reopens your wound. Instead, devote yourself to making your husband happy. And it should not surprise me if you should come to love him.
