

SMILES APPEAR AS LONG PRISON TERM FADES AWAY

Irwin Shamley Happy Today
With Only Six Months'
Sentence Before Him.

One of the happiest men in the Marion County jail today is Irwin Shamley, colored. For six months in jail seems nothing after a five-year penitentiary sentence.

Shamley appeared before Judge Albert B. Anderson in Federal Court Thursday for peddling morphine.

"What is the penalty," Anderson asked Dixon H. Bynum, assistant district attorney.

"Not more than five years and $5,000 fine," Bynum answered.

Shamley's face fell. He shuffled nervously for a few seconds, then he said:

"Judge that shuh am an awful lot of time."

He was all smiles when Anderson said:

"Six months."

Equally happy were Emma Whitney and Flossie Dunn, colored, charged with a similar offense, when they were let go with one day in jail.

Mrs. Dunn admitted she had served a thirty-day sentence for operating a blind tiger.

"What was the matter, didn't you have any influence?" asked Judge Anderson.
