Doyle Coming Here to Tell of Belief in Ghosts

Ghosts! Sir Arthur Conan Doyle is on his way to America. He will make another attempt to tell us about his experiences with spiritualism.

Doyle will arrive in New York tomorrow. He will lecture at the Munt Theater on Tuesday evening, April 24, under the auspices of Ona B. Talbot.

Mrs. Talbot announces the subject as "Recent Psychic Evidence." Before leaving London, Doyle said to Milton Bronner, NEA staff correspondent:

"Tell my many friends in America," he said, "that I am coming back once more to preach the gospel of spiritualism, with the enlightenment and hope and consolation that it holds for men and women who gaze wistfully into the beyond."

The famous novelist and spiritualist, who toured America last summer, has been in correspondence with J. Malcolm Bird, secretary of the committee of judges who will preside at the tests of spirit phenomena and photographs for the $5,000 awards offered by the Scientific American.

If any tests are held in New York during his stay he will probably attend as the guest of the judges.

"I have been encouraged to make the trip again," he said, "because of the open-mindedness of the American public. They give you a fair and square deal. They are willing to listen, to be shown, to be convinced."

In America I met none of the spirit of captious and even ugly opposition that spiritualists have encountered in some other countries.

"Everywhere spiritualism meets the same kind of opponents—materialists, who believe in no hereafter and who, therefore, realize that spiritualism if proven breaks down their whole philosophy of life; some of the clergy, who mistakenly think we are breaking down the power of religion, whereas we are really broadening it and strengthening it; and finally enough, the conjurers, who think we are interlopers and that our sciences are only tricks."
