Damage Estimated at $10,000 in Fourth Blaze at Ketcham Home

FIRE-SWEPT KETCHAM HOMESTEAD

Firemen today estimated $10,000 as the damage to the William A. Ketcham homestead, 4122 N. Capitol Ave., partially destroyed by fire Sunday afternoon due to an overheated furnace.

Mrs. Ketcham, widow of the former State attorney general and commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, was assisted from the house and sheltered in a neighbor's home.

Forty Years a Landmark The Ketcham home for forty years had been a landmark in north Indianapolis.

Three firemen were slightly injured. Battalion Chief R. A. McKinney was stunned when a falling joist struck his head. Capt. Thomas Duncan, Pumper Company No. 5, and Herbert Gardner were slightly burned in aiding McKinney.

The flames were restricted to the roof, attic and second floor of the nineteen-room residence. Virtually everything above the first floor was destroyed. Prompt work by the neighbors saved many valuable books, Civil War relics, antique furniture and other valuables on the first floor.

Covered by Insurance The loss was covered by insurance. Dr. Jane Ketcham said. Members of the Ketcham family returned from church services shortly before the fire was discovered. They said the furnace fire had been banked. The fire was the fourth at the home in two years. Chief McKinney said all four started from an overheated furnace.

Some time ago it was announced that the Mapleton Civic League planned to purchase the Ketcham property for community park. The estate extends from Illinois St. to Capitol Ave. Large forest trees remain on the tract. H. E. Calland, president of the league, said the league plans had been considered favorably by members of the Ketcham family.

Pure Americanism belongs to no one church or organization, Dr. O. W. Fifer, pastor of the Central Avenue Methodist Church, said Sunday in his sermon on "Patrolism Plus, or What Is Patriotism?"

Dr. Fifer struck at secret organizations and deplored "interruption" of religious services by such organizations.

"The people seem bewildered over our Americanism," said Dr. Fifer. "Pure Americanism need not hide the face. To mask is too much like the old-time highwayman or executioner to make it acceptable today."

Daughter of King Emmanuel Renounces Rank to Wed Commoner—Ceremony Most Impressive With Services in Quirinal and Paolina Chapel.

By United Press ROME, April 9.—Princess Yolanda, eldest daughter of King Victor Emmanuel and Queen Elena, was married today to Count Calvi di Bergolo, an Italian commoner.

Two ceremonies, a civil one in the Quirinal palace, at which Premier Mussolini acted as clerk, and a religious ceremony in the beautiful Paolina chapel made available by special dispensation of the Pope, were performed.

The princess, who is 21 years old, is famed as a born woman and for her dark Savoyan beauty. Her husband is one of the best horsemen in the army, a captain in the crack Nizza cavalry. He is 14 years older than his bride. In marrying Count di Bergolo, Yolanda renounced her royal rank—but gained the enthusiastic affection of her countrymen, especially the fascists, who hail the princess choice of an Italian over royal foreigners who sought her hand as an ultimate triumph of Italian nationalism.

Royal Family Assembles Guests and members of the royal family assembled in the green room of the Quirinal before 10 o'clock.

Before them all came the princess on the arm of her dashing fiancé. Yolanda's pearly and raven hair made her a vivid study in contrast with a faint tint of pink in her cheeks offset as the civil ceremony was performed. The bridegroom was in his uniform as a cavalry captain, with the medals he won for heroism during the World War.

After the bride and groom followed King Victor and Queen Elena and Queen Margherita, the queen mother, with the royal princesses and the court personnel. Wearers of the Collar of the Annunziata, on old Italian order whose members are "cousins of the king," senate and chamber dignitaries and the bridegroom's family were on hand.

The civil ceremony lasted only a few minutes. Premier Mussolini, acting as civil clerk, read the instrument recording the marriage, which was then signed by General Diaz and Admiral Thaondereval, chiefs of Italy's army and navy, as witnesses. Signor Tittoni, president of the Senate, was official recorder for the bride and groom.

Mussolini Declines Honor Tittoni's services in this capacity recalled a pretty piece of courtesy on the part of Mussolini yesterday. There was but a single vacancy in the order of the Annunziata and King Victor wished to bestow the collar upon Signor Tittoni but was uncertain how Mussolini would take it, so offered the order to the premier first. Mussolini gracefully declined and has been promised the next collar.

The royal procession formed after the civil ceremony and proceeded to the Paolina chapel. This time it was in reverse order from that which approached the Quirinal green room. Count Nacchi, master of ceremonial affairs made the way, followed by the Royal Commissioner of Rome Cremonesi, president of the provincial council Orrei, president of the provincial deputations Baccelli and officials of different categories, according to the order of precedence.

The Paolina chapel was simply and richly decorated, red velvet hangings concealing the altars. Tapestry, brought from Turin, was hung near the altar, while red velvet brocades covered the kneeling stools. A special tribunal for the royal family had been erected, facing the altar.

As the wedding procession entered, the choir rendered a sixteenth century motif without accompaniment.

The bride, in a simple wedding gown, her only ornament a simple brilliant sapphire engagement ring given her by the count knelt in front of the altar by the side of fiancee.

When the all-important question was asked the princess, she answered "yes" in a firm, musical voice heard throughout the chapel. Rings were exchanged and the ceremony was over.
