COURT 'BEGS' FOR LAWYER SO CASE CAN GO TO TRIAL

Judge and Prosecutor Wait Half Hour to Try Woman.

When Cora Collier, colored, 617 W. Walnut St., appeared in Criminal Court to face trial on charges of operating a blind tiger, she didn't have a lawyer.

"Who's your counsel?" asked Special Judge Frank A. Symmes. "Ira Holmes, your honor. He's supposed to be here."

"Now, judge, I ask you to assign her a lawyer, and let's get this trial over with," expostulated William S. Remy, deputy prosecutor. "This case is up for the eleventh time."

Watchful Waiting

Half an hour the court waited. Not one of the 500 lawyers in Indianapolis showed up. Probably for the first time in the history of Marion County, a client went begging.

The judge read a law book. The prosecutor paced up and down, declaring he would wait until night if necessary. Cora wanted to go home.

Protests Unavailing

Finally a lawyer appeared and the case was tried over Cora's outcry that she "had done paid Mr. Holmes and didn't want any one else."

"Thirty days in jail and $100 and costs," said Judge Symmes, after hearing that Cora poured the evidence in the sink when officers broke down the back door.

UNSKILLED LABOR SCARCE IN STATE

Housing Shortage Is Acute, Report Shows.

There is a great shortage of unskilled labor in Indianapolis, and unemployment practically has ceased to exist, according to Barney Cohen, director of the Third District of the United States employment service, a branch of the department of labor. Cohen's report states all available labor throughout Indiana is being used in highway improvement. Street improvement work in Indianapolis also is giving employment to great numbers.

To a great degree, the shortage of labor is due to inadequate housing facilities, it is stated. Reports from every Indiana city in the list indicated that the housing situation was acute. The predicted shortage of farm labor already has become a fact, the report said.

Washington Street Would Have $32.50 to Move Upstairs to Sell 'Em at

If Washington Street gave the individual a painstaking measurement—to note a probable low shoulder or other peculiarity of the figure—

If Washington Street were to cut the goods to that individual measurement and then treated it as an individual throughout its process of being tailored—

If Washington Street were to take the time required to seam up garments as marked for the individual; or to give the necessary work to get the collar to lay just right around that individual neck—for example—

If Washington Street were to do all this, then, in our opinion WASHINGTON STREET WOULD HAVE TO MOVE UPSTAIRS TO SELL AT OUR PRICES!

We're tailoring suits to individual measure for $32.50, and we recommend them. We've got lots of $32.50 patterns, and they're displayed where you cannot miss seeing them. Our skilled workmanship goes into every one of them and our reputation is back of every one.

Of course, we have patterns up to $50, but none higher. Whatever price you may decide on, you are guaranteed a fit the way YOU want it to fit or you don't take it.

Visit us while looking around and see for yourself the more than 400 patterns displayed, showing the exceptional values in made-to-measure tailoring we are offering.
