The workmanship on these ready-for-service suits is identical with the workmanship on our individual made-to-measure garments—same genuine Irish linen canvas fronts; same silk thread used throughout; same linings.

These ready-for-service suits were made up during spare time by our tailors and from our own wools, and every garment reflects the skilled tailoring that characterizes our made-to-measure garments.

Some of these ready-for-service suits offered are ones which were made to measure for customers who have never called for them, and were transferred to our ready-for-service department. Naturally, the range of styles and sizes is limited; those, however, who are fortunate enough to find their size will be able to obtain a suit at an astonishingly low price, quality considered.

Our ready-for-service department is a necessary adjunct to our individual made-to-measure tailoring, and the garments themselves reflect the style and workmanship that characterize our made-to-measure clothes.

ALL-WOOL PANTS Also made up from our own stock of wools and bolt ends during spare time by the same tailors who tailor our made-to-measure garments. A wide range of patterns and sizes in values of $8, $10, $12, for $4—$5—$6

Think of Oil in Terms of 1923

IN considering the oil business as it is today, we must think in terms of 1923 and not in terms of 1913—which was before such unheard of impetus had been given to the automotive industry.

In 1913 there were but 1,287,000 motor vehicles registered in the United States, while the year ending December 31, 1922, saw a total registration of 12,239,114—an increase of 900%.

The magnitude of the oil business is so vast that no man can visualize it clearly. It is difficult to picture the needs of 12¼ million automobiles, to say nothing of the vast gallonage needed to supply tractors, stationary gas engines, and the demand for gasoline coming from the arts and industries generally.

The problem of supplying 12¼ million cars is quite different from the problem confronting the industry a decade ago when but 1¼ million cars were in commission.

The adaptation to a changing situation meant the making over of the petroleum industry.

The Standard Oil Company (Indiana) has retained its leadership by expanding its facilities both in the manufacture and distribution rapidly enough to meet the insistent demand for greater service.

During the past ten years the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) has grown as the need for its products and service has grown. This ever-increasing demand for petroleum products has made it necessary for the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) to expand its facilities to an extraordinary degree. Yet, with its multiplied facilities, the Company finds that all its energies are absorbed in meeting the demand for its products from 30 million people in the ten Middle Western States it serves.

While proud of the service it has rendered in the past, the Standard Oil Company today is thinking in terms of 1923 and the years to come.
