

PRESENTATION OF MEMORIAL MARKS • CHURCH BIRTHDAY

Presbyterian Workers Tell Incidents of Early Days.

An anniversary concert will be given and a memorial tablet dedicated at the First Presbyterian Church tonight. This is one of a series of meetings in connection with the centennial celebration of the church's founding. Presentation of the tablet will be made by Albert Baker and the response by Irving Williams. Music will be provided by the church quartette.

The life of Dr. Isaac Coe, founder of the first Sunday school in Indianapolis and one of the first two elders in the First Church was recalled Thursday night at a meeting at the church by Henry Coe Sickles, great-grandson of Dr. Coe. The story of the Second Presbyterian Church in Marion County, which was the outgrowth of the First, was told by Mrs. William W. Woolen. It was the Washington Church, established in what is now Broad Ripple in 1829 by twenty-seven members of the first congregation. Work of women prominent in the congregation in the eighties was related by Mrs. John M. Holliday. The history of other men, women and events which helped to shape the early destiny of the church was related.

Now, who says "There ain't no sich animal"?

WE'VE all read of the farmer who, on his first time to see a giraffe, exclaimed: "There ain't no sich animal." There are men right here in Indianapolis—men of keen business judgment and sagacity—who have been reading our advertisements from time to time, in which we say, among other things, that—

Our material is all wool; that we have a wide variety of patterns and textures to select from; that we buy direct from the woolen mills and that the bolts are sent direct from there to our warerooms.

They also have read our statements that we employ our own skilled tailors, and that measurements are taken by experts; the garments are cut, trimmed and tailored by experts; and that we guarantee a fit the way the customer wants it to fit, or he doesn't take it.

They have read our statement that we will immediately refund the small deposit to any patron if FOR ANY REASON he does not want to take out his suit, and that we will make this refund without quibble.

There are men who have let these statements fall on deaf ears because they in substance said, "There ain't no sich animal." BUT—

On the other hand, there are others of equally keen business judgment who have at least INVESTIGATED to learn whether or not we could continue to day in and day out make these claims without there being at least an element of truth in them.

They investigated and learned to their satisfaction and by the saving of money that every claim we make is fully substantiated.

Today many of our regular patrons are men who formerly paid fabulous prices for suits; they have found sufficient satisfaction in our service to continue to come to us for their garments.

The man who actually is seeking clothes economy will at least visit our salesroom, where he may see what we have with just as much ease as if he were buying a railroad ticket.
