Gloria Foy, Musical Comedy Star, Says Dance and Grow Tall

By MARIAN HALE
NEW YORK, June 20.—Many a girl has bewailed the fact that she lacked an inch or so in height, and thought there was nothing to be done about it.

But Gloria Foy, quite accidentally and unintentionally, added cubits to her stature, and her system may be effective for others.

Miss Foy simply danced on an inch and a half—and did it after she had reached the mature age of 21, the period in life when most girls feel they can depend on their height and forego the troublesome practice of letting down hem.

"Six months after I had been dancing in 'Up She Goes,'" Miss Foy explained, "I had gained my extra height. I spoke to my dancing master about it and he did not seem surprised in the least. Rather, he assured me vigorous dancing so stretches the muscles that it causes almost any person engaged in it to grow taller."

On Her Toes

"Then I spoke to a physician and he, too, said it was quite the rule to elongate by exercise."

To be sure, Miss Foy spends much time on her toes. She dances for practically two hours each evening, during the performance, to say nothing of two matinees a week.

She takes a dancing lesson every day, which consumes another hour, and usually practices two hours a day, besides. So, you see, she really worked for those inches.

Adds to Pep

"But I never felt so well or had so much pep as since I have been exercising so consistently," she assured me. "I wish I could urge all women to keep up their dancing and their exercises past the point of fatigue where they really get fun and exhilaration out of what they do."

"I practice my bar work and my ballet technique just as faithfully now as I did when I started to dance. I can stand infinitely more physical and mental strain than I used to, and I have never had even a suspicion of ill health since my engagement began. I've been appearing steadily now for eight months."

"Of course, only a professional dancer would want to give as much time to technique as I do, but even a small dose of it, say half an hour a day, would be enough to give any woman a new joy in activity—and probably an inch or so, if she stuck to it."

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Cott to her friend, Sally Atherton

Dear Sally—I knew of course that dad would help you over your trouble, for you have always been to him just like one of his own daughters.

He said to me as he handed me this check for $2,000, which I am enclosing:

"You tell that little girl to keep a stiff upper lip and I'll see that she gets through."

"Tell her to send her husband where he will have the care of the best specialists and if she feels that it is too hard for her to keep her position, to throw it up and just turn her attention to that great big foolish boy that she married."

And here, Sally, dear, is something that I want to do. Dad gave me also a couple of thousand dollars and I am sending one of them to you. I want you to use this, not for Sam, but for yourself, and I am going to ask you to do something that you may think is foolish with it.

I want you to buy a couple of pretty frocks and above all two nifty hats. There is nothing in this world that makes a woman feel quite so much as though she were absolutely friendless as to go around in shabby clothes.

Knowing you as I do, dear Sally, I expect that is just exactly what you are doing at the present moment while you are spending every cent you can rake and scrape to get Sam back where he can see again.

Don't think I am frivolous, dear, or silly to ask you to do this. I know wood, mother of the bridegroom, was the only out-of-town guest.
