THIRD MEMBER OF HARDING PARTY, IN CRASH, DIES

Injuries to Colorado State Historian Are Fatal—Craig Only Survivor.

By United Press
DENVER, Colo., June 25.—Thomas F. Dawson, Colorado State historian, died in the county hospital here today from injuries received in an automobile accident yesterday afternoon, bringing the total to three dead out of the four passengers of the Denver Press Club car.

Dawson passed away suddenly a few minutes after he seemed to be past the critical stage.

Donald Craig, Washington correspondent of the New York Herald, now remains the only survivor of the accident, which occurred when an auto, carrying a party of correspondents on an excursion trip in connection with President Harding's visit in Denver plunged over a seventy-five-foot cliff.

The dead: Sumner Curtis, Washington, D. C., Republican national committee representative.

Thomas F. French, Denver, driver of the car.

Thomas A. Dawson, curator of the Denver museum, former U. S. Senate clerk and Washington correspondent.

President Harding might himself have ridden in the death car, which had been set aside for his use, but engagements prevented his going along.

The accident occurred in a manner not yet explained. French, who was driving, never recovered consciousness. One of a line of cars ascending a dangerous trail over Lookout Mountain, the automobile containing the victims suddenly left the road and plunged over the side of a cliff.

When rescuers reached the wrecked car Curtis was dead, French unconscious and the others suffering from severe injuries.

The automobile plunged down about seventy-five feet. It is thought of the steering gear may have been defective.

Occupants in cars to the rear saw the death car swerve suddenly as it reached a sharp curve and then crash through two steel cables forming a "safety fence" on the brink.
