

GAS ENGINEERS START REPAIR OF DAMAGE IN FIRE

Company Officials Estimate
Loss at $250,000—
Service Resumed.

Engineers of the Citizens Gas Company started today on plans for rebuilding the part of the by-products building of the Prospect St. plant, destroyed by fire Sunday. The damage was estimated by officials of the company at $250,000.

Service was shut off for a short time, but the normal supply of gas was sent into the mains as soon as the blaze was under control. The fire was believed to have started from a hot bearing in a turbine. Several explosions wrecked the benzol plant almost immediately. About ten thousand gallons of benzol and twenty-five thousand gallons of oil were burned.

Ernest Elliott, fireman of company No. 3, was burned when a benzol tank exploded. At the city hospital it was said his injuries are not serious.

Officials of the gas company praised firemen for their work.

Keenan Brings Art of Stage to Screen; Modern Wife Must Be a Diplomat

By WALTER D. HICKMAN
FRANK KEENAN is the reason why "Scars of Jealousy" is such a good picture.

And there are two other reasons—Lloyd Hughes and Marguerite de la Motte. It is the acting that counts in this picture. The story is just so, but what marvelous life and strength these players bring to this movie. Keenan possesses that same artistry which George Arliss always exhibits. Keenan in "Scars of Jealousy" brings to the screen the same artistry which has made Keenan such a wonderful player on the stage. Halfway efforts on the screen will not do these days as the movie fans expects and demands as full and as intelligent characterization as theater patrons demand on the stage.

Keenan is cast as a Southern Colonel who believes in the pride of family and as usual such fathers are "blessed" with worthless sons. Father on discovering that his son has turned his mansion into a resort for burlesque actors, promptly, but in a gentlemanly way, escorted son and his trooping friends to the "door." The Colonel goes to the hills of Alabama and selects a rough mountain lad (a son of mountain bootleggers) to take the place of his son. Then the drama begins.

Keenan as the Colonel and Lloyd Hughes as the rough lad of the mountains and other numerous assistants make this movie seem reasonable by splendid acting. You probably will notice that the story is theatrical, but Keenan's artistry puts the acting above the story.

Keenan belongs to that school of actors which teaches one to act with his eyes and hands. Keenan actually "talks" with his eyes in "Scars of Jealousy."

Nearly forgot to tell you that you might suspicion by the way the movie starts that it is going to concern French history during the reign of one of the famous Louis, but this is not the case, the scene suddenly shifts from the days of French kings to the State of Alabama in 1923.

There is no doubt but that you are going to like "Scars of Jealousy," because Keenan, Hughes and the others are in the picture.

The Keenan movie is the featured offering at the Circle this week. The bill includes "Wonders of the Sea," the regular music and a news movie showing the Dempsey-Gibbonsistic conversation, not the actual fighting, but scenes in and around Shelby.

Tom Mix Thrills
Movie Fans at Rialto.

Some of the earlier adventures of Tom Mix are on view this week at the Rialto.

Several of Mix's elder productions have been combed for good thrills and a new scenario built around the scenes thus secured.

Not much of the continuity is lost in this process, and Mix is seen at his best in stunts that have given him his place in filmdom.

The plot is not the thing in this picture. Mix is the one outstanding feature, and he dominates the scenes, some of which will doubtless be recognized as being the best in one of his previous productions.

Louis Firpo, who is being mentioned as a likely contender for the heavyweight championship of the world, is shown in some graphic training stunts in another film.

Firpo seems to have some excellent qualities, as shown in this picture.

At the Rialto all this week.—(By Observer.)

A Movie of Streets
Is on View at Smith's

Glimpses of all parts of New York are given in this week's offering at Mister Smith's. "The Streets of New York."

This play includes many streets, from the Italian section to the exclusive Riverside Dr. Some of the characters come from the tenement district, and others from millionaires' homes.

This play is a drama and is serious entertainment. The rich man in the story cheats a mother and son of their inheritance and builds a great fortune.

His secret is known to an eccentric character, who aids the boy and extorts money from the thief.

The daughter of the rich man falls in love with the injured boy, who was run down by her machine, and their love affair threatens many complications. At the end, justice is secured for the mother and her boy after a thrilling and realistic storm rescues the rich thief.

In movies dealing with the divorce evil, it is the wife who "pays and pays." It is a relief to see a movie story dealing with this subject which does not make the wife a weak character. The modern wife realizes that it is her business to hold on to her husband if he begins to slip. Tears will not bring him back. Why not be diplomatic? Cause hubby to lose his job and then see how many meals he can afford.

Some idea. Husband discovers that without his position of big salary that the vampire, who caused him to forget his home, wife and child, even gets his telephone number.

Husband discovers what a "fool" he has been and, having no other place to hang his hat, hubby goes home to his clever little wife and admires what a boob he has been. Then everybody is happy.

Just as "funny" as are the manners of Alice's father is the haughty and foolish pride of the family next door. They are people who have more money than brains, all except the son. He would rather wear overalls than a dress suit.

In contrasting the "bad manners" he will miss. It sounds like a bully good idea to me.

Miss Novak has not given this movie a "film wife," but a real flesh and blood individual. Of course, she is not happy when she discovers that her husband is making "eyes" at a vampire. She just goes home and maps out a campaign which will make her husband think of home and the family gas range.

John Bowers plays the role of the husband who discovers that his wife is more than just a wife, but a great diplomat.

At the Apollo all week.

Let Your Husband Is Slipping
Teach a Lesson

It makes no difference whether you like Jane Novak in "Divorce," but it does convey the hope that the modern wife doesn't have to give up in tears when her husband begins to stay out late at night with a vampire.

This play is being taught at the Apollo this week in a movie called "Divorce." The comedy part of the bill is furnished by Lloyd Hamilton.

He seems to have much the worst of it during the first part of the picture, but redeems himself when his enemies begin quarreling among themselves.

The scenes are laid in a little country town and Gibson appears as the owner of a mortgage smothered drug store. When the mortgages are foreclosed he is without a job and has only his grandmother's money with which to start business again.

A crook gains his confidence, and the action starts with the week.

Gladys Walton, in "Gossip," will be the feature for the latter part of the week.—(By Observer.)
