

SHERIFF WILL BE BURIED WITH FULL MILITARY HONORS

All Claws Fail in Search for Slaying of William Van Camp.

By Times Special.
BROOKVILLE, Ind., Aug. 22.—A military funeral will be held Thursday at 3 p. m. for William Van Camp, sheriff of Franklin County, who was shot by two automobile bandits in a woods on the Glen Luse farm, eight miles east of here Monday.

The Brookville American Legion post of which Van Camp, an overseas veteran, was a member, will have charge of rites at the grave.

Searching parties have scoured the country since the day of the murder, word of the crime has been broadcast by radio and authorities of Indiana and Ohio have been notified, but no trace of the suspects has been found.

No Definite Clue Uncovered
Two men, a woman and a boy detained in a liquor raid at the Albert Bowling home in Butler Township, Franklin County, Tuesday were quizzed in connection with the murder. The officers planned the raid after receiving reports that the persons involved had been transferring liquor to an automobile at Mt. Carmel, near the scene of the shooting. The alleged run runners were said to be traveling in a machine bearing an Ohio license.

When the Bowling place was raided a still was found in operation. Albert Bowling, 24, and John Fields, 19, were held on liquor charges. The woman and boy were released. No clue was uncovered.

Bandits' Car Found.
An automobile believed to have been used by the bandits was found on the Middletown-Eaton pike, near Middletown, Ohio. It answered the description in every respect and bore the license number said to have been carried by the bandits' car.

Citizens of Franklin County have offered a reward of $1,000 for capture of the slayers.

When the man was arrested early today, he was carrying a sack containing a pipe wrench, screw driver, file and two pairs of pliers.

He was unable to give a good account of himself, police said.

False Family Pride Gets a Setback as "Tweedles" Opens on Broadway

By JAMES W. DEAN
NEW YORK, Aug. 22.—As the final curtain fell on "Tweedles," this reviewer wondered how Booth Tarkington and Harry Leon Wilson had created such a highly diverting comedy on such a tenuous theme.

Winsora Tweedle's folks believe that she is much better than Julian Castlebury. Her folks run an antiquity shop and tea room at a summer resort. They have lived in that community for generations.

The Castlebury parents believe their son much above the simple village maiden. Their family is one of the oldest of Philadelphia and one of illustrious name in history.

Now this theme is not so tenuous as it seems. Today, Harry H. and Myrtle Kabotchnik have asked the Common Pleas Court in Philadelphia for permission to shorten their name to Cabot. Objection to the change has been raised on the ground that Cabot is a name associated for centuries with the early history of America.

I believe that the court could readily solve this problem by sending the Kabotchniks to see this new Tarkington-Wilson play. They undoubtedly would be willing to change their name to Tweedle. Or if the Cabots were to see "Tweedles" they would probably withdraw their objections to the taking of their name by the Kabotchniks.

In the play, Winsora and Julian bring their ancestors to a dead level by facing their elders with some of the infamous episodes hung on their respective family trees. The elders had recounted only the famous achievements of their forbears. The most undemocratic trait of the American is this false pride in the family trees. Men were born in the same equality three generations ago as they are today.

The romantic thread of "Tweedles" seems to be woven from the romances of "Clarence" and "Seventeen." The hero is a young fellow considered pretty much of a boob by most of his acquaintances. An unsophisticated little girl sees him at his true worth and falls in love with him.

This is brought about in "Tweedles" by an exceedingly clever slant in psychology. The boy believes that he has become deeply interested in some bristol glass he buys in the antiquity shop. The girl thinks she looks forward to the boy's visit for the pleasant discussions they have about the glass. They are conscious of their love only through an associated idea.

The plot of "Tweedles" may seem hardly strong enough to carry three acts, but Tarkington and Wilson have built up several excellent character parts and expanded the action with adroit bits of by-play.

Ruth Gordon as the heroine and Gregory Kelly, the hero, are thoroughly in the spirit of the play at all times. Donald Mack, as a bibulous old uncle of Winsora; George Farren, as the proud and oratorical father, and Patti Cortez, as the prim and close-mouthed aunt, are three of the best character players gathered in one production in many months.

MOTHERS OPPOSE SCHOOL TRANSFER

Want Child Nutrition Program Unchanged.

Opposition to transferring control of child nutrition program from the board of school commissioners to the city board of health was expressed in a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the Federation of Parent-Teacher Associations today.

The problem, the resolution stated, should "remain under its present control, where it is being developed as an educational rather than a medical problem."

The question now rests with the school board's education committee.

The resolution was signed by Mrs. Charles H. Smith, Federation president; Mrs. Carl J. Fletcher, second vice president; Mrs. H. O. Tracy, secretary-treasurer; Mrs. W. A. Reddick, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. G. Quincy Dunlop, chairman of the program committee.
