New Breed of Swashbucklers Take Place of Captain Kidd Along Rum Row

NEA Service Staff Writer
(Copyright, 1924 by NEA Service)
ON BOARD U. S. S. SENECA,
OFF ATLANTIC COAST,
Jan. 18.—A new breed of swashbuckling gentry has stepped upon the boards to take the place of Captain Kidd and other famous daredevils of a dead age.

Up to the passage of the prohibition amendment, the successors of the redoubtable rascals that spent their ill-gotten gains in the taverns of lower Broadway, ruffling it with the best, were but poor imitations. But with the outlawing of liquor, and the immense wealth waiting those daring enough to supply the demand for the contraband liquid, there came into being men of the same type as those whose daring feats were the subject of song and story.

The capture by the Seneca of the motor boat K-13091 with her crew of two, George Murray and Frank McManus, who were charged with impeding coast guard officers in the performance of their duty, is a fair sample of the nerve displayed by some of the men who go far to sea in fast motor boats.

With the approach of the Seneca, the two men, who were aboard one of the ships on Rum Row, leaped to their boat, which was moored alongside, and sped away, despite commands from the Senate to halt. Bullets cut the water about them; one hit their engine; shells burst around them; it was not until one shell burst directly overhead and sprayed them with its fragments that they halted and surrendered.

Aboard the Seneca they braved the officers with sneering smiles and insolent remarks—their philosophy, "Better luck next time." And with the wealth that rolls in upon them, they flaunt themselves in the gilded cafes and cabarets of Broadway.

To earn their money they go to sea in small, fast, motor boats that usually run from 35 to 40 feet in length and 8 to 8½ feet in beam. The boats are heavily engine, and are very speedy. They take these small boats ten to twelve miles out to sea, into an area that is often storm-swept, and covered with dense fogs. Giant waves that batter everything in their path must be braved. With any where from 100 to 200 cases of whiskey aboard, their boat's gun-whale may be only an inch or so above water.

But despite danger of storm, of waves, or of capture, they gallily ply their trade—laughing at success, insolently smiling at defeat.

This is one of a series by Dorman.

'ON TO POLE,' IS SLOGAN OF NAVY DIRIGIBLE PILOTS

Mastery of Storm by Shenandoah Heightens Confidence of Airmen.

By United Press
LAKEHURST, N. J., Jan. 18.—"On to the pole!" Triumphant in their mastery over one of the most severe storms ever experienced by a dirigible airship, officers of the Shenandoah are exclaiming that slogan now, the epitome of their hopes for the future.

The safe return of the Navy's giant air vessel, after a harrowing experience in a seventy-mile gale, with a skeleton crew and with the ship's bow badly smashed, has only heightened confidence of Navy men in the prowess of their craft, and whetted their eagerness to reveal its worthiness in the contemplated voyage to the northern polar regions.

"The Shenandoah will be ready to take the air again within thirty days," said an announcement Thursday night from Captain McCreary, commandant of the air station.

Captain McCreary will appoint immediately a board of three officers, headed by Commander Ralph D. Weyerbacher, to conduct a thorough examination of the Shenandoah.

The entire outer fabric covering, which was torn in several places by its flight through the storm, probably will be removed and replaced by a new one.
