LETTER FROM ELLEN BLEDSOE TO SARAH HENDRICKS

MY DEAR SARAH:

I've had some peculiar cases since we graduated from the nurses' training school, but I think the most peculiar as well as the pleasantest one I have ever had, I am now nursing.

His name is Sydney Carton, and he got smashed up in an automobile accident and was brought in here about two weeks ago. It seems he's quite a man in this town, but at that, for a long time we could not find who or what he was. He had nothing on him that means real identification until we telegraphed for a man named John Alden Prescott, whose card we found in the automobile.

Friends Flock In

Mr. Prescott came down immediately and identified him, and then his friends began to flock in. For a long time he was in a comatose state. Nobody could understand why he was out driving alone at that time of night; in fact, it looked as though he had gotten up, hurriedly dressed in some old clothing, and started out for a long, reckless drive in his motor.

His friend, Mr. Prescott, says he is not a drinking man, and he has had no money troubles—in fact, he is quite wealthy—and he cannot understand what is the matter with him. Once in a while he speaks the name of "Jack," and then again he will murmur the name of "Leslie." Mr. Prescott says that Leslie is the name of his wife, and that they were all great friends.

You can imagine how surprised I was, day before yesterday, when I found Mr. Carton looking at me with utterly sane eyes. He asked me if he had been delirious. I told him he had been almost in a state of coma, and had only mentioned the words "Jack" and "Leslie" occasionally.

Asleep

He gave me the same explanation of his using these names as did Mr. Prescott. I told him Mr. Prescott was here, and explained to him how he had been found. He told me he didn't remember taking the car out at all; said he must have been walking in his sleep, and asked immediately to see his friend, Mr. Prescott.

I told him I did not think he was well enough to see his friend, and that he was liable, if he ran the least temperature, to become delirious. At this he seemed very much worried, and made me promise, if he showed the slightest indication of becoming delirious, I would not let any of his friends in to see him.

He made such an odd about it, that I solemnly took oath that I would see that none of them, not even Mr. Prescott, should see him when he was not himself.

I think he worried so about the matter that he did not become delirious again, and three times in the half waking condition, and then he would whisper the name "Leslie." He never mentioned his friend Jack again.

This morning, however, he seemed much better, and I think he will be taken to his apartment this afternoon. Here comes the doctor—will finish after he has gone.

Getting Married Always Gambling for Happiness

Discouraged by what she has seen of married life, a young girl wonders whether she had not better break her engagement and risk finding happiness as an "old maid."

No matter how carefully a woman may choose her husband, no matter how carefully a man may choose his wife, marriage is a gamble. The young bride and bridegroom cannot look into the future, to read the changes the years will make in their characters. They can only gamble with Fate.

But that is no reason for condemning marriage. Neither is the fact that many marriages do result unhappily. It is reason for exercising great care and being very certain of love, before marrying.

The average woman's life is not complete without a marriage, even in this "modern" age. The divorce records sometimes make us forget the many marriages that do result happily.

Gambling With Fate
Dear Miss Lee: I have been engaged to a fellow of my own age, and I feel that I have no confidence in men when it comes to marrying.

I hold a position where I am thrown in contact with numerous married couples. The men try to tell me the inside of their wives' backs are turned.

One couple retired my confidence in married life and I began to think seriously of it. The man treated her with respect. She was very good to me and would see she did her best.

Then, when she would come in he would barely look around, and he would scold. But when I came in, he would grin all over, and jolly good to me and would see she did her best.

Some women seem to be married, but when they are treated by some men treat them as if they were not married. I see them shake some pep into them.

Strange to say, it is always the good women who are the most of them. My luck would be, if I were to marry a man who would feel like a whipped cur, or would give me an "old maid" for the rest of my days!

I live an "old maid" would not marry a man who humiliated me. But it does not necessarily follow that I would be an "old maid."

Marriage is a gamble. Some of the women into whom you would like to "shake some pep" probably would profit much if you did. A woman can not hold a husband's love just by being good. Of course, the fact that his wife lacks "pep" does not excuse a man's unfaithfulness. However, it does explain it frequently.

Do you think you would be happy as an "old maid"? That is one question to consider, in deciding what to do with your future.

These "Winter-Waits" violin solo, Miss Lucille Stanley, "Gypsy Dance," Natchez, piano solo, Miss Frances Wishard, "Sonata in C, Allegro Movement," Mozart; vocal quartette, Mrs. Jesse Barkerley Fitch, Misses June Barkeley, Mildred John's and Ruth Beals, "The Indian Serenade," and "Soft, Soft Wind."

Covers for six were marked with small paper mache rabbits filled with Easter candies, which were the favors.

Martha Lee Says

Ardent Suitor

Dear Madam: I am a young man of 23 and have had company with several girl friends. About six months ago I met a real young girl of about 19. She has had company with a young man of 19 for about three years. She told me she went with him out to meet a man out of him. He says he will not give her up until she is married.

He has humored her all the time—takes her any place she asks to go. She has said she did not love him, as she loves me. I treat her nice and buy nice presents for her. She still wants to have dates with him.

Am I foolish to buy her nice presents and not have dates with other girls? Is a girl of that age old enough to realize what true love is and not to love two men at once?

Some girls of 19 are mature enough to know true love; most of them are not. This girl evidently is not in love. You cannot expect her to give up other men friends until she is engaged.

If you enjoy her friendship enough to want to give her presents, that is up to you. You are under no obligations not to call on other girls, if you enjoy their company.

Madame Grundy Frowns

Dear Martha Lee: Recently I took a young girl boarder. As a matter of courtesy, I invited her boy friend. During the dinner, the girl told me her boy friend had given her a ring and she feared she could not dance. I immediately asked her to dance and she danced and remained out of sight the greater part of the evening, making no explanation. Afterward, she learned that I had been on the stage in the auditorium, quite apart from the fact that she had given me the proper respect, and much more important, was that she was not particularly "old-fashioned." The girl and boy were unpardonably rude as well as indiscreet.

Dance Etiquette

Dear Miss Lee: I take a young lady to dances, in a crowd where I should be quantified than she is. I am not what is called a "good mixer." I introduce some of the men to her. I should have an occasional dance with other girls, but I do not like to leave her sitting out. I have proceeded to give her a "quilt."

It is customary, at dances nowadays, for the men to "exchange" dances. Naturally, a man tries to arrange a pleasant program as possible for his partner. At the same time he may obtain dances with girls with whom he particularly desires to dance.
