Do Girls Really Yearn for Long Hair Again, as Winner of Prize Believes?

KATHRYNE DYER, BEFORE AND AFTER BOBBING.

Bobbed hair has been blessed and cursed, "doomed" and revived, blamed and praised. Innumerable times during the last few years.

At almost regular intervals, the death knell of the bobbed hair fashion has been sounded. And still it prevails.

Now comes Miss Kathryn Dyer, 17, of Washington, D. C., with a message for American girlhood. Her mother has one for parents.

Miss Dyer, although she won a prize for having the prettiest "bob" in the capital, in a contest with 2,000 entrants, wishes she had her long hair back. She thinks other girls feel the same way, but are unwilling to admit it.

How about it, girls? The number of "bobs" would seem to point the other way, but Miss Dyer has an idea the girls are just too "proud" to let their hair grow again and have the anti-bobbers say "I told you so."

Martha Lee wants to know how girls really feel. Let me hear from you. You needn't worry about the "I told you so's," because your names will not be used.

Read what Miss Dyer and her mother say, and then write your honest opinion to Martha Lee, Indianapolis Times.

"You just can't fix bobbed hair the way you want it," Miss Dyer says. "The best effects seem to be impossible and the 'bob' feels tousled all the time. I imagine half the girls who bob feel the same way I do, but most of them are too proud to say so."

"Constant bobbing," adds Mrs. Frederick T. Dyer, Kathryn's mother, "makes the girls' necks sore and costs lots of money. If a daughter will bob, it's better for her mother to do the bobbing."

The three barbers who awarded the bobbed hair prize to Kathryn declared her offering by far the most artistically cut and arranged. This was a joke on the barbering profession, because Mother Dyer, who practices what she preaches, herself did the bobbing.

Barrier of Years

Dear Miss Lee: I am 28 years old. I have been married twice and my husband is dead. I have a dear little boy. I would like to be married to you. He takes me any place I want to go. But I don't want to come between them, as I am too old for him. Will you advise me what to do? This girl is not in the city. He never mentions her to me. N. G. Stop bobbing the cradle, if you do not want to bring unhappiness to yourself, this young man and, if there is such a person, the "other woman." Break off this friendship, and be careful not to let the man grow sentimental in doing it.

ROSE: 1. Seems to me it's time for you and your husband to give an ultimatum to this brother-in-law. Tell him either to get to work or get out. Also, if your mother needs help, insist that she be given her share. But remember, in dealing with both your mother and mother-in-law, that you have a duty to your children, too. Certainly it would be better for you to move into your own home, if at all possible.

2. Whether it is possible to make more money on a farm than in an office depends entirely upon conditions—mainly upon the inclinations and ability of the one who is making the money.

3. Many couples are living on $30 a week, and buying furniture. It is hard, with a baby to care for, but can be done, if you are an extremely economical housekeeper.

LETTER FROM LESLIE PRESCOTT TO RUTH BURKE.

DEAR RUTH:

Don't think I did not appreciate your letter. It had all the news and just the kind of news in it that I wanted to learn. I don't think you can realize how grateful I am to you, dear, for all you have done for me.

The reason I haven't answered your dear letter before this was because it reached me in the morning, and the evening Jack came in. Of course I did not know he was coming, and as luck would have it, I had gone over to Alice Van Courtland's to play mah jongg. Mother had insisted upon it. She said I was getting into such a nervous state that she could hardly live with me, and that my father was much perturbed over my unhappy face.

This was news to me, as I thought I had succeeded in making dad think I was very happy.

Alice was having a large party, and mother insisted upon me going in evening dress. I had hardly gotten there, however, before mother called me on the phone to tell me that Jack was at the house. He had brought little Jack and his nurse, and both of them were much disappointed because I was not there to greet them.

I could hardly speak, Ruth, over the phone. My heart was beating so fast that I could see it.

Mother said little Jack was particularly heartbroken, because he had been told he was going to see muver at grandma's house, and when he found that he was at grandma's house and I was not there, he seemed to think every one was in league to keep him from his sweet muver.

At that moment his voice was raised in such an overpowering and irrepressible paroxysm of sobs and yells that I could hear him over the phone. Stupidly, the car was waiting for me. Like a wild woman, I rushed through the people Alice had invited with the exclamation: "Jack and my baby are at mother's!"

When I got into the car I was shaking so my teeth chattered, but I managed to calm down a little before I arrived at the house.

You know what Jack is when he is disappointed—when his plans go awry. Well, I believe he was never more disappointed in his life, than when he arrived at the house and found I was not there. As near as I can make out he had expected to come and find me just inside the door, my arm outstretched, the string of pearls in my hand, ready to fall on his neck and ask forgiveness and to hand him the necklace to be sent to Karl.

Instead he found me at the party—and worse than that, when mother sent for me and I came in all dolled up in the evening clothes, I was wearing the pearls!

That was the last straw. I wish you could have seen his face when he saw me. It was something I will never forget. I think he would have

Your Attention's Arrested!

It is queer how many of us consider the weather as our own personal annoyance.

On nasty, cold, shivery days this winter we'll blurt out to some other fellow, "This is some horrible day!"—or something worse.

Liquid days, whether they come in rain, snow or ice form, have some compensating virtue—even if it's just to test our disposition or temper our appreciation for the sunshiny ones.

Without the water nature furnishes the earth, we'd be eating granite goulash, flagstone sandwiches, sand salad and pebble puddings.

Weather doesn't take mankind into its confidence—sometimes it doesn't use a bit of judgment—it's headstrong and gets disagreeable when it wills.

Don't blame God! The original plan is in operation today despite Noah's flood, the Japanese earthquake or the presidential nominations—JUST KEEP THE FURNACE FROM GETTING HUNGRY—FEED IT COAL—GOOD COAL—then this winter's weather won't annoy you—the piano will sound better in a warm house—home harmony will be emphasized.

A full bin of coal will take the nastiness out of any winter weather.
