

JOHNSON STAND ON LA FOLLETTE IS BIG QUESTION

Go Duck Hunting When Senator Wheeler Arrives
for Speech.

By LOWELL MELLETT,
Times Staff Correspondent.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 13.—What will Hiram Johnson do and if so when? Is the political question of the moment in California. Some of his friends say his heart is with La Follette, but that he fears he will be called a "poor sport" if he comes out openly against Coolidge, instead of accepting the result of last spring's primaries. Others say he does not wish to endanger his hold on the State Republican organization, which is now dominated by Johnson men. Still others assert that unless he comes out for La Follette his influence with progressive voters in the State will be gone, regardless of his control over the State organization.

No person is found to say he will lift a finger for Coolidge. Pressed by both sides to commit himself Johnson remains silent.

Go Duck Hunting

The day Senator Wheeler reached San Francisco he went duck hunting. His only important utterance thus far has been his strong denunciation of the Supreme Court's ruling which prevented La Follette electors being filed on an independent ticket.

Without waiting for their chief, many of these close friends are out working for La Follette, however, and, generally speaking, the normal Johnson strength in California seems largely won over to La Follette.

Johnson's real antipathy and that of his friends toward Coolidge has produced an odd situation in the Coolidge campaign. Under the State law the State central committee is chosen by the party's candidates for the Legislature. The party's candidate this year include a majority of Johnson men and the State committee elected by them is a Johnson organization. Their hearts just aren't in the Coolidge campaign, though they are making a perfunctory showing of carrying it on. The real Coolidge men, such as Mary Requa, representative of the Sinclair Oil interests; Ralph Arnold, another oil man; William H. Crocker, national committeeman; C. C. Teague and others of the Herbert Hoover contingent had to organize their own State committee to carry on the fight. These two committees have separate offices in San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Names Called

Former President Barrows of the University of California is stamping the State calling all La Follette folks reds and rapscallions.

One local newspaper organ gave six inches of space to Senator Wheeler's meeting, one of the biggest ever held in Oakland, and a column and a half to a fanciful, fictitious description of the private Pullman car in which he, like other candidates, is traveling. Another has printed a yarn concerning an enormous slush fund which it says La Follette forces are spending in California.

The action of the court in barring a list of independent electors from the ballot and forcing the ticket to be filed under the Socialist heading, apparently has helped the La Follette prospects more than it has hurt it.

The northern half of the State is claimed with complete confidence by the La Follette forces. They are not optimistic about the southern half, however, notwithstanding they say that reports from that section have improved in the past ten days. The newspaper poll of Los Angeles now shows La Follette leading, whereas Coolidge had led for some weeks.

Practical politicians, including the Johnson men working for La Follette, say that in order to win La Follette may need a very decisive majority in northern California.

Roaring Herds, an Echo of Pioneer Days, a Dash of Natural Beauty Make 'Sundown' Great Movie

By WALTER D. HICKMAN

TAKE the great silence of the western plains and suddenly change it into the last stamping ground of thousands of cattle.

Take the horizon and place man and cattle before the last rays of the day's sun. Move man, nature and cattle into a drama of both victory and fall.

Then place over the entire picture the element of human nature and one's love and respect for the pioneer of the West.

Only then will you get an idea of the moving dramatic beauty of "Sundown." First National's contribution to the small group of the leading photoplays of the year. "The Covered Wagon" showed the early work of the pioneers who took the West out of the hands of the savages.

"Sundown" shows the completion of the work of the pioneer—the days when the "gentle fingers of civilization" are in control. Today an expression can be used, if the free range has been taken over by the "nesters," thus driving the cattlemen to the hills into Mexico. The "wagon" movie had poetic beauty and fierce dramatic strength and these same great qualities are found in the simple but true theme of "Sundown."

Only the movies can bring us pavement dwellers into contact with the real out-door. The genius of the movie director and the writer of stories provides the dramatic suspense. When nature and man get together as they do in "Sundown," you are sure that you will face nature and man in true form.

It is seldom in the theater that I forget myself, that is to be entirely swallowed up by both the beauty and the drama of the entertainment. I asked for and received a private showing of "Sundown," because I wanted to give it several days thought before I told you about it.

There in the private projection room of this theater, practically alone, I was moved and thrilled as I seldom am. "Sundown" brought me into elbow reach of the great plains—the same plains over which the Indians and the pioneer made their last stand. The same ground where the Indians and the pioneer made their last stand. The same ground
