The Tangle

I had a little talk with Ruth Burke over the telephone today. I have never heard her voice sound so happy.

I wonder if you have also found out, Leslie, that people can seldom disguise their voices in ordinary everyday conversation. Instinctively they will drop into the raspy cadences of unhappiness, or the pathetic hollowness of grief that suits their mood.

When a person is happy his voice sounds full and resonant and there is a lift in it that always strikes the ear with a pleasantness.

There, you didn't think I was as analytical as that, did you, dear? Perhaps I am learning some of it from you, but most of all I am learning it through Mrs. Atherton, whose own voice changes almost from hour to hour with her moods, and from the people who come to me for positions. I can almost always tell whether they really need the position or not. It is easier to tell from their voices if they need the jobs than it is to tell if they are capable of filling them.

Ruth always had a pathetic minor tone in her voice after Harry went away. I think it was from her that I first began to notice the difference that happiness or grief made in voices.

Ruth told me more in detail the same surprising news she wrote to you. It seems that Harry Ellington's sister was young enough to have been Harry's daughter. They did not have the same mother.

Strange, isn't it, that after all that Harry had done to Ruth, after he had almost broken her heart, he was sure of her loyalty and forgiveness, so sure that he could leave to her as a kind of legacy this girl.

Ruth, of course, wants the girl to stay with her. She thinks she is the sweetest young woman she has ever known. She would like to have her stay with her as her younger sister, but Zoe, that's the girl's name, is quite independent and wants to do for herself.

This one thing which Harry Ellington did may offset some of the trouble he made for others. He seemed determined that his sister should have the best education possible, and when she found her brother, whom she had always thought rich, had left nothing, she tried to put this learning to some good use.

"As soon as I found that she spoke French so well," Ruth said, "I immediately thought of Leslie and his lack for Leslie will have to be looking out for a governess for him very soon."

It rather made me smile to think of Jack, who can as yet barely master the words "mother" and "dad," learning French. I said something of this to Ruth and she replied seriously that every child should learn a foreign language before he learned his own. She was quite convincing and I'm going over to her house tonight as you suggested and look the girl over. If I think she is all Ruth thinks she is I will send her over to you with Mrs. Atherton. She might be a great help to you as companion and social secretary until our little daughter makes her appearance on the scene.

Parents Rule on After Children Are 'of Age'

An age limit has been set at which the legal influence of parents ends. But none can be set for the end of their moral influence.

Legion are the men and women whose lives were dominated by their parents, long after they became "of age" legally.

Such influence frequently serves a good purpose. It has kept many from wandering from the paths of right. It has kept men and women from losing faith in humanity.

But—oh, yes, there's always a "but"—parental influence sometimes is exerted in unfortunate ways. Men have lived to a lonely old age because their mothers did not believe the girls the sons loved had the proper "social presence."

Girls, old enough to know their own hearts, have given up men they loved because their parents gave more thought to their bank accounts than to their character.

How parental influence threatens disaster to a man and woman in their thirties is told in this letter:

Pride Injured

Dear Miss Lee: I have been going with a girl for about six months. She is a wonderful girl, sweet in every way, but I have heard from a girl friend, her father does not want me to see her.

So I have decided to forget her, if I could. I am very much disappointed, but I think I am not rich enough. I know I am not rich enough.

I know I am not rich enough. I know I am not rich enough. I know I am not rich enough.

It seems to me a man and woman in their thirties are old enough to decide their own fate. What if the girl loves you? Because of pride, you would let her suffer.

You say you love her. Then tell her so, ask her to marry you, and let her do the deciding.

It's hard to get along with an unsympathetic family-in-law. I know, but it would be harder to get along without the woman you love. Besides, you'd be surprised at the change a proposal of marriage to this woman might make in her family.

Nursery Needs Sweets

How many Indianapolis housewives will help kiddies at the Indianapolis day nursery enjoy sweets Thanksgiving day?

An appeal for butter, jam, jelly or fruit for the children at the nursery has been issued by Mrs. J. D. Hess, president. Delivery can be made at the girl scout headquarters, 410 Board of Trade Bldg., or at the nursery, 530 W. Vermont St.

ATTORNEY'S AUTO KILLS WATCHMAN; RAIN IS BLAMED

Man Was Crossing Street With Umbrella When Struck by Car.

Frank L. Littleton, 50, attorney, of 119 E. Michigan St., was fined today on his own recognizance following his arrest Sunday night on a charge of involuntary manslaughter pending further investigation of accident at Delaware and Michigan Sts. that resulted in the death of Milton C. Weekly, 42, of 1010 E. Ohio St.

Motor Policemen Mancus and Oakley said witnesses told them Weekly was walking across the street carrying an umbrella. He died at the city hospital three hours after the accident. Weekly was identified by a special policeman badge he used in his employment at the Medical Arts building, Pennsylvania and Michigan Sts. Funeral arrangements for Weekly have not been completed. Relatives say burial will probably be at New Marysville, Ind.

Jay Walking Blamed

Policemen say Jay walking caused the injury of Charles Wall, 50, of 1513 Shelby St., who was taken to the city hospital today when struck by an auto driven by Ooe W. Johnson, 40, of 655 N. Temple Ave., at Washington and Pennsylvania Sts. Johnson was slated.

Mrs. Sam Yeaver, 434 Washington Blvd., was injured when an auto driven by her husband collided at 1021 N. Meridian St. with an auto driven by Walter Russell, Apartment 70, Richelieu. While police investigated this accident, two other autos driven by Theodore Nedias, 521 N. Delaware St., and Earl Tupper, 643 N. Meridian St., crashed in the same manner.

Street Car Strikes Man

Clinton Stacy, 1023 Tabor St., was taken to the Deaconess Hospital with leg injuries received when struck by a S. East St. car at Maryland and Meridian Sts. Austin Wheeler, 1130 S. Sheffield Ave., motorman, was slated.
