FARM TAXES IN STATE ANALYZED

Almost Half Levied for School Purposes.

Almost 50 cents of the average 1923 farm tax dollar in Indiana was levied for school purposes, according to a statement by the State Reel and Agricultural Foundation. Of this dollar, 47.5 cents went to the support of education, 27.8 cents for the construction and maintenance of highways, while the remaining 24.6 cents was divided between the general costs of government benevolent institutions and miscellaneous expenditures.

A study of 109 Indiana rented farms from 1919 to 1923 showed an average advance in taxes from 30 cents per acre in 1919 to $1.60 in 1923, with a slight decline in 1922 to $1.41 per acre. Only 16.5 per cent of the rural taxes paid in Indiana during 1923 went to the support of the State government. The rest was levied and spent locally—45.4 per cent by the townships and 37.7 per cent by the counties. Few farmers paid Federal income tax.

The statement shows that taxes on the average farm last year amounted to approximately 17.6 per cent of the net farm returns. Nearly 7 per cent of the gross value of all farm products went to pay farm taxes in 1923, as compared with only 4.9 per cent in 1913.

Centric Freezes to Death PLYMOUTH, Ind., Dec. 29.—Friends broke into the room of "Teddy" Soles, 66, eccentric, and found him frozen to death.

Ends Life With Shotgun MICHIGAN CITY, Ind., Dec. 29.—Funeral arrangements were made today for William Killingsbeck, 49, who committed suicide by blowing his head off with a shotgun.

Dear, I am so lonely that this cozy city by the sea seems a howling wilderness in which I am lost and all the while calling, calling for you.

I did not think it possible, dear heart, that your absence could possibly make such a difference in my life.

Although it may make you more contented than any man should be, I can not resist telling you that I think I would go out and throw myself off the steel pier tonight if I knew you were not coming back. I would not want to live without you. I do not think I could live without you.

If some one had told me a few months ago that you or any one else in all this world could have possibly made himself a part of me as you have, dear one, I would have thought he was crazy.

It is so wonderful to know that somewhere in this world tonight there is a man who is thinking of me, wishing for me, as I am thinking and wishing for him.

I feel your kisses, dearest, I hear your caressing voice. I see your loveliest eyes—oh, what is the use! I am an old married woman and probably you, my husband, will think that it is foolish to write you such sentimental thoughts as I have just put down whatever you think of it. I am going to send it anyway, for love mine, I believe I have been able to realize what a great—what a miraculous thing it is to be able to love any one as I love you.

In all the books, in all the drama, in all the poetry one reads of the pain of loving and the joy of being loved.

Dearest, I have proven to myself at least that to really love, love unselfishly, loyally, faithfully and trustfully is the greatest bliss on this earth.

Of course, I am unspesakably happy in the knowledge that you love me, but more—even more than that—I am filled with the joy that I did not know of this earth because I have found that in my frozen heart has crept the power to love you.

The sunshine is more golden, the moon is more radiant in its silvery sheen, the trees are greener, the sky is bluer, the flowers more fragrant, the birds sing more sweetly and all the world is so beautiful that the thought of golden streets and peary gates do not intrigue me in the least while you are alive and I can love you.

Age Poor Argument to Use Against Dan Cupid

Every once in a while, a young man of my acquaintance starts thinking more or less seriously of marriage.

"I know when I'd marry, if I wanted to get married now," he told me today. "But I'm not ready to get married. Still, I guess the longer I wait the less likely I am to marry at all. S'pose I'll be an old bachelor."

He now is at the mature age of 24.

"That doesn't follow," I reassured him. "No man is safe—if that's the way you feel about it—from marriage until he has a fly in his hand."

"Bachelors marry for one of two reasons. Either they get tired of eating at restaurants and clubs and seeking amusement every evening and decide to 'settle down,' or they fall more deeply in love than they ever have before, and forget all about their resolutions to live forever in single blessedness."

"In either event, the blessings of bachelorhood seem as nothing beside the joy of a home and family."

"The man who falls in love after he things he is past the 'marrying age' is as likely as not to marry a baby doll, when what he needs is a combination of a housekeeper, sweetheart and diplomat."

"The bachelor does not lose his sense of romance because he waits a long time to marry. But he does lose his adaptability, and that is important."

Dear Miss Lee: My friends would laugh if they knew about this letter but I have always been a "confirmed bachelor." But now I think I would like to get married. If you have the great girl, I guess I'm getting old and want to settle down. I am 24.

I sometimes find a friend who is seven years younger than I am and other times I go to a dance. This friend is one I have known all my life, and I have never thought of falling in love with her because she seemed more like a sister.

Which kind of girl would you advise me to marry? I am 24.

A home cannot be built properly on a desire to "settle down." If there is no love in it, it becomes merely a hotel. So my advice is to marry the girl you love.

The chances of happiness would be greater, without considering the question of love, if you married the woman who knows you, who has watched you grow and knows your habits and your faults. But if you did not love her and she did not love you, you soon would lose your desire to "settle down" with her.

Let the matter rest until you find love. If you do not ask which girl you should marry.

World life is empty without this old friend? Think it over. You may love her without realizing it. That has happened.
