Amendment Giving Credit
for Religious Education to Be Proposed.

Principal interest of Indiana Council of Religious Education the past year has been development of week-day Bible instruction, according to E. T. Albertson, executive secretary.

An amendment to the 1922 school law, providing credit for instruction in the Bible, up to 120 minutes a week, for children whose parents or guardians desire them to be taught, will be introduced in next Legislature.

Bill provides that a church or organization direct the teaching and no public funds be used. H. N. Sherwood, State superintendent of public instruction, is chairman of a conference, which meets Jan. 13, to lay plans for making possible week-day religious education for every child.

Schools Well Attended

Recommendations of national education committee, approved by the local board, provide that the church, home and school cooperate; that proper physical equipment be provided; stress the importance of separation of church and State, and emphasize importance of proper administration.

Reorganization of the council so every denomination is officially represented on the board, is one of the important accomplishments this year, Albertson said.

"We have stressed the value of religious education as it finds expression in community and summer schools. More than 8,000 attended such schools during the past summer. A winter school at the Y. W. C. A., under direction of Prof. W. C. Morro, dean, had had heavy attendance.

Winona Plans Laid

"Forty vacation Bible schools for children were held in Indianapolis this year. More than 10,000 children in Indiana received week-day Bible instruction, in addition to those under parochial supervision."

Sunday school conferences and conventions were attended by 175,000 persons. "Every Sunday school a standard school" was the slogan adopted. Training of teachers was stressed.

The State convention at Winona, June 18-19, promised to be one of the largest and most practical ever held.

Records show a Protestant enrollment of 300,000 in Indiana Sunday schools. Average enrollment in a county is 23 per cent of population.

ENVERA, Dec. 31.—The League of Nations is here to stay.

This is the declaration of Eric Drummond, general secretary of the League of Nations, in an exclusive interview granted the Press.

"I have asked me what are the aims of the League of Nations for 1925," said Sir Eric. "In order to give an answer to that question, I should have to be a prophet and know what are the international prospects of the world for the next year, since the League now includes fifty-five nations and its aims are intimately bound up with those of its members."

The League is now firmly established as a recognized international organization. I believe if you asked representatives of the governments of any of those fifty-five States to which I have referred, they would declare that they could only with difficulty imagine a world in which the League of Nations existed and at the disappearance of the League could create a void which would immediately have to be filled. In a word, if it could be imagined that present League ceased to function, the nations would immediately need to create a fresh one.

Program for 1925

It is not possible to give a satisfactory answer to the question which is put to me without somewhat changing its phrasing. May I say in what way? What is the League for 1925 as at present?

"I can only enumerate the problems with which the League is called upon to deal, technical and nonpolitical problems of the League. It will be the political side in a manner so many activities international and economic.

Concerned with the political aspects of the League. Here it is really important to set a definite scope to the work. It lies for the League to decide what problems they will take. Should it, as I hope the case, there arise in conflicts between sovereign states, to threaten peace or friendly relationship, the League, on an appropriate occasion, will be ready to fulfill its trust, under the leadership and endeavor to maintain by assuring a just and equitable solution of difficulties which may arise.

Only definite political problems with which we know that the League will still be dealing in 1925 are the frontier between Turkey and the Irak territory.

In case an important mission sent out by the League to examine the whole political situation recommendations as

BETSY ROSS SHOPS SHOW BIG GROWTH

Candy Concern Now Has Three Stores.

Starting with no previous business experience and in ten years building up one of the most successful candy concerns in the Middle West is the record made by Mrs. Josephine Frawley, owner of the Betsy Ross Candy Shop.

Even now Mrs. Frawley insists that she does not understand business, but a study of the development and success of her concern would indicate otherwise.

Ten years ago last month the first Betsy Ross shop was opened in a small room on E. Market St. Today the enterprise has grown to a point where three downtown stores, located at 15 E. Market St., the Claypool Hotel building and 5 N. Meridian St., and a large, modern, up-to-date factory at 101 S. Capitol Ave., are kept busy supplying the demand.

Mrs. Frawley also has added a wholesale department to the business and candies now are sold to stores throughout the State.
