

GASOLINE SAVING SEEN AS RESULT OF PURDUE WORK

Engineering Experiments
With Carburetors Bring
Improvements.

By Times Special
LAFAYETTE, Ind., Jan. 10.—Eventual saving of gasoline for motorists, through greater improvement of present carburetors, will be the result of activities of the Engineering Experimental Station of Purdue University, a review of the year's work, just compiled, reveals.

Experiments have been conducted dealing with carburetors and the construction of small holes which regulate the flow of gasoline. Variation in these holes, caused by irregular machining, even in the highest grade carburetors, causes gasoline wastage. It was shown.

The resume also discloses important contributions to the field of electrical engineering, including development of new techniques for the production of nitrogen, electrostatic investigations valuable to industries in development of high voltage equipment, and designing of a lightning generator for testing lightning arresters, lightning rods and high voltage insulators.

The Purdue electrical laboratory is one of two places in the country where artificial lightning can be made, generating current up to 600,000 volts.

Strengthening of cement mortar and elimination of impurities in cast iron are other achievements of the station.
