Amendments Proposed by Morals Committee Accepted.

The Wright bone dry bill passed to engagement today by a viva voce vote when the House accepted the majority report of the Public Morals Committee with amendments.

The minority committee report, signed by Representatives Kenney and Korf, was recommending indefinite postponement, was lost on viva voce vote.

Principal amendments eliminate sections providing that odor of intoxicants about a person driving an automobile shall be prima facie evidence he is intoxicated; making both the first and second offense of possession, manufacturing, etc., carry a jail sentence of from thirty days to six months in addition to from $100 to $500 fine; allowing judges to suspend sentences for first and second offense; allowing use of wines and liquors in pharmaceuticals; striking out penalty for contempt; providing for change of venue and striking out of the emergency clause.

Amendment offered by Representative Carlisle, South Bend, relative to search warrants was lost. Carlisle maintained the provision on search warrants made the law unconstitutional. Representative Wright declared the same provision is in force in twenty States.

Sparkling Eyes Accompany Good Health

MRS. G. E. MOTTWEILER

"Just a few lines to thank you for your wonderful medicine. I had a trouble for about a year that was very weakening and hard to control. I took medicine for it but it didn't seem to do much good, so I thought I would try Dr. Pierce's medicine which I had heard so much about. I took five bottles of the 'Favorite Prescription' and two of the 'Medical Discovery', and I feel like a different woman. I praise Dr. Pierce's medicine and recommend them to all suffering women."—Mrs. George E. Mottweiler, 1747 Shelby St., New Albany, Ind.

Skeleton of Mamma's Past Nearly Wrecks Life of Little French Girl

By WALTER D. HICKMAN

Skeletons placed in the private closet of the life of Mrs. Vervier by her own "unconventional" actions in search of "happiness" rattled loudly when her own daughter, Alix, sought her happiness.

That is the situation faced by Mme. Vervier, the mother of Alix, the little French girl, in Anne Douglas Sedgwick's "The Little French Girl."

Madame was a powerful woman. She had great beauty, a brilliant mind and a personality which collected a crowd of "delightful" French people around her.

She had so much intelligence that she needed less soul than other people. Adapting a phrase of the author in describing one of the "delightful people" surrounding Madame.

Main St. language would call Madame swift, fast and not moral. She picked the daisies, the roses and the faded leaves in the various ages of her life. She had lived, but the history of her past threatened to wreck the happiness of her daughter when the child sought happiness as the wife of Gilles, a coking good English lad who was backed by all the traditions of conventional English life.

Gilles, in looking over Madame, reached this verdict: "She is not a bad woman; wrong, but not bad." Madame, although a mother, amused herself with "lovers."

How Own Inventory

Madame, being a very wise woman, summed up her life as follows: "But do not fear for me too much. I shall know when youth is over. I shall know when the laurels are cut and winter has come to the woods. I shall be able to curl my sails before the night comes on; and if one curls one's sails in time, Monsieur Gilles, one is never wrecked. And there will be, I trust, a little harbor for me somewhere. Alix's children to love. And my memories. I shall be in old age a much happier woman than most. Most old women have only to remember how they were loved by nobody at all."

Madame, in her own words: "One never turns back at my age. One's path has grown too closely about one. Other paths are all blocked out. And I was perhaps destined for it. For some women may fill their hearts and stifle the personal longings, but for others these compensations are not enough. They must have love. They must have a lover. And in France husbands are seldom lovers. So, if one is a mountain torrent, one leaps over the precipice. Do you see? That is my history."

Story Will Live

It is my opinion that "The Little French Girl" will take its place along side of the few contributions to modern fiction which has a right to be passed over to the next generation.

I admit that I was more interested in the character drawing of Madame Vervier and her companions that I was in the many chapters devoted to Gilles and his strict English home.

Gilles, Alix, Madame and many other characters, including Toppie live as gigantic contributions to the art of reflection by a great novelist. Here is a novel which has been a best seller for months. And it will continue to be because it is a gigantic masterpiece of characterization and as an accurate medium of comparing English and French life and their viewpoints.

Houghton Mifflin Company published "The Little French Girl." It is undoubtedly the most discussed book of the day. If you want to be up-to-date, then you must read "The Little French Girl."

It is not a cheap attempt at sensationalism, but a marvelously accurate reflection of English and French life. Nothing finer has come to my attention lately.

gritly on the dresser, I picks the nickel up, tosses it in the air, catches it, and then hands it back to him.

"Buy yourself a cigar," I told him. "I like you too well to take it."

"He got peevish and called the captain. The captain laughed. Believe me, these Legislators don't want nothing, and they don't give nothing, and they don't get nothing." Another hotel I talked to a bell boy leaning scotchily against the cigar counter.

"See that fellow there in the gray overcoat?" he said.

I nodded.

The Kind They Like

"That's a half dollar tip. He's a millionaire. That's the kind of fellows we like to serve. Dimes and mostly nickels are all we get out of the legislators."

"In the first place, most of them come from small towns and are used to waiting on themselves. Consequently they don't call for much service. It's the rich men we like, who want and know what service is. You know we have to eat. Pity us if we had to live off the legislator."

His face gloomed.

"But then business isn't what it used to be—not since the first of the year. Nobody is tipping much these days."

"Sure, these boys have the money. Couldn't afford to attend the Legislature with the present hotel prices if they didn't, but they certainly stick to what they have."

I nearly dropped when I went up to one lad and said:

"I'm from The Times and getting a little story about whether the legislators are spending much money. How are they taking care of you?"

A Little Surprise

"Great," he said, his face breaking into smiles.

"Um," I muttered.

"Yes, they have parties in the Rainbow room and they sing and laugh. Just a little while ago, they took up a collection for us boys and gave us a $1.50 apiece. And then, for a bottle of White Rock, they give us a dollar and tell us to keep the change."

"Um, um," I reiterated, scribbling rapidly. "That's strange. Boys in the other hotels tell me they're tight."
