By United Press

ANCHORAGE, Alaska, Jan. 30.—Speed records were being shattered along the frozen mail trails of the northland today as men and dogs "mushed" onward to save lives in diphtheria-ravaged Nome.

The antitoxin reached Ruby, more than 200 miles from Nome, late Thursday. Unless accidents prevent, it will reach Nome Monday, six days after it was shipped from the Government hospital here by train to Nenana and consigned to men and dogs for the race against death.
