Quake Headed Southward

Next Disturbance to Be in Central America, Italian Scientist Says.

Prof. Raffaele Bendani, noted Italian scientist, correctly forecast the earthquake which rocked the north-east section of the United States and parts of Canada Saturday. Professor Bendani predicted this quake twenty-four hours before it occurred and now declares disturbances toward which the telluric activity is heading through Mexico and Guatemala.

By PROF. RAFFAELE BENDANI (Noted Italian Seismologist) Copyright, 1920, by United Press

FAENZA, Italy, March 3.—Central America will be the scene of the next notable earth disturbance.

There are two main centers of telluric activity. The first, after shaking the submarine bottoms of the Far East, is now heading in the direction of the northeastern points of Siberia and Alaska.

The second, to which Saturday's tremors were due, is heading toward Central America by way of Mexico and Guatemala. This indicates there will be an earth quake, perhaps severe, perhaps slight, in Central America in the near future.

Last week's earthquake manifestation can plainly be traced to this second center of activity. The phenomenon was predicted with amazing accuracy. As recorded at my observatory in Faenza, the center of the disturbance was approximately 7,000 kilometers away (this is the equivalent of about 4,300 miles).

The disturbance of Saturday night has an analogy in the earthquake of 1888.
