

LORADO TAFT, SCULPTOR, IS TO BE FETED

Plans for Entertainment of Noted Artist Are Announced.

Plans for entertainment of Lorado Taft, noted American sculptor, who will lecture in the sculpture court of the John Herron Art Institute Thursday evening under auspices of the Indianapolis center of the Drama League, have been announced. Mr. Taft will arrive Thursday afternoon from Champaign, Ill., where he will lecture Wednesday at the University of Illinois.

He will be the guest of honor at a tea at the Central Library given by Charles E. Rush, librarian, and members of the public library staff. Officers and directors of the Indianapolis center will be guests also.

Mrs. Ovid Butler Jameson, 1035 N. Pennsylvania St., will entertain Mr. Taft at her home during his stay here. She will give a dinner in his honor Thursday evening.

Following his address, Mr. Taft will be entertained at an informal reception by the Indianapolis center of the Drama League. Officers and directors are in charge. McCormick trio of Shortridge High School, Edwin McCormick, violinist; Miss Janet Little, cellist, and Miss Susan Shedd, pianist, will play.

The Tangle

LETTER FROM LESLIE PRESCOTT TO RUTH BURKE.

Dear Ruth—I am a little bit worried to know what called you to New York in such a rush that you could not even phone me.

Yesterday morning they telephoned me from the little shop that you had gone and that they did not feel that they should extend any more credit to Alice Hartley without the o. k. of either you or I. I hope you will approve of what I decided in the matter. I told them to give her credit to the extent of $1,000. As her account stands now, she owes them $450. That will allow her to buy her $550 more "pretties."

Poor Alice! She was the prettiest girl in Albany when I came here. They tell me that she had been a rival in the contest of beauty with Paula Perier, although Alice was a society girl and Paula an artist's model.

She came over to my house last night and told me she hoped to marry Porter Breed. Porter, you know, has been breeding around her for years and she expected him to marry when her father died.

She told me that Porter had seemed to grow cold at the time she became suddenly poor, but lately he had given her reason to believe that his interest in her had kindled again.

She said she was at the end of the little money and had left after his debts were paid and unless Porter proposed to her within the next month or two she would be absolutely penniless.

I was terribly shocked, Ruth. You know that Alice has no more idea of money than a baby. She has always had some one to take care of her. Some one to pay her bills. I do not believe that she has even combed her own hair or dressed herself in all her life. She was brought up by her mother to make a rich marriage, and her mother died peacefully thinking she had done everything she could for her daughter when Porter Breed's attentions became conspicuous.

Alice told me this as a matter of course, and when I said, "Do you love Porter Breed?" "What has that to do with it?" she answered.

"Marriage and love are two entirely different things. Love is gloriously unreasonable, something that comes and goes without your knowing from whence it comes or where it goes. Marriage is a business and should only be gone into reasonably. It is the greatest business of life for a girl. It is the real fight between the sexes. Men are always fighting to keep out of it and women are always fighting to get them in. I've got to marry to live. I like Porter—perhaps I love him—I don't know, Leslie, what this thing is that people call love and rave so much about. I have never known a man that I could not dismiss for another if necessary.

"Porter has enough money to indulge me in my worst extravagances. I shall be perfectly successful in woman's natural and inevitable business, if I marry him." (Copyright, 1925, NEA Service, Inc.)

IF YOU MUST CRITICISE, START ON OWN FAULTS

Do you measure up to your own standard? Take stock honestly, then answer that question, before you criticize others. Unthinkingly you point to the faults of other people, perhaps your friends. You hold them up to ridicule. You show how they could improve themselves.

Take a look in the mirror of truth. Could your criticisms become boomerangs? Have you some of the very faults you have just pointed out?

A girl decides that the man she marries must be handsome, wealthy, kind, generous, friendly, considerate, attentive, and so on without end. What has she to offer this perfect husband? Can she even begin to measure up?

It is well to set your standards high. But they should be as high for yourself as for others. Be sure you measure up yourself before you begin to look for the weaknesses of others.

Hunting Trouble
Dear Miss Lee: I am engaged to be married in June. My fiancé is wonderful, but he has one annoying habit that worries me. Whenever he gets the least bit excited, he runs his hands through his hair and makes it stand on end. I like him very much, but I don't like to have him look wild. How can I get him to stop this?

My dear girl, you certainly traveled far afield to find a fault in your future husband. Have you no saving habits, no faults, that you should be so exacting?

Marriage is made up of compromises. If you are not willing to compromise on such a small point, and let your fiancé have the pleasure of rumpiling his own hair, I am afraid you will meet with difficulties when it comes to more important matters.

Six Years
Dear Miss Lee: I am a girl of 18. I have been acquainted with a man six years. He comes from a respectable family and has always treated me with courtesy and kindness. He has asked me for a few dates. Do you think he is too old for me?

No, Sue.

Same Girl
Dear Miss Lee: A friend of mine has been going with a certain girl since they were both children. He is now 17 and she is 16. They are very devoted to each other. After having known this girl about five months, I have grown to like her very very well; better, in fact, than I like any other girl I know. I believe I like her a better time than he can, and as they're both so young, what difference would it make? I, too, am BLUE.

I can see no objections to your asking the girl for dates, but I don't know why the question of "winning" her should come in, at your age. Surely she could have dates with both of you.

Of course you will let your boy friend know you are asking the girl to go out with you.
