All Great Religions Grow From Small Beginnings

The International Union Sunday School Conference, June 14-16, 1925, in Antioch—Acts 11:19-30.

By WM. E. GILROY, D. D., Editor of The Congregationalist.

Even great religions grow from small beginnings, and seeming adversity is the handmaid of progress. It was persecution that first determined the spread of the Christian religion. Following the killing of Stephen the disciples were scattered, and among other places to which they went was the city of Antioch. It was a very notable city, of great importance in ancient times; but its fame has been preserved in the world chiefly because of a circumstance to which probably nobody paid any attention at the time—the disciples were called Christians first at Antioch.

A Splendid City

The city that had this distinction was the third city of the ancient world, a city of half a million inhabitants, exceeded in size only by Rome and Alexandria. The Antioch in our lesson is to be distinguished from another Antioch mentioned in the New Testament, called "Antioch in Pisidia"—a description not quite correct, because the place was situated near, but not actually in, Pisidia.

The city of our lesson was one of thirty-seven cities built by Seleucus Nikator, who made himself master of most of the Asiatic empire that had been ruled by Alexander the Great. He had a mania for city building, naming his cities after himself or after relatives.

There were sixteen "Antiochs," so named after his father, but this Antioch in Syria was the largest and most splendid of all the cities built by Nikator.

The extent and beauty of the city at this time may be indicated by the fact that a great corso with double drive lanes, from east to west of the city, through which, in wet weather, the populace could walk from one end to the other under cover. It was adorned along its course by trees, flowers, fountains and beautiful statues.

A Hotbed of Vice

Antioch was situated on the navigable river Orontes, about fourteen miles from the Mediterranean, and about 300 miles north of Jerusalem. It was the ocean gateway to a vast and wealthy empire, on the great line of trade, a meeting place between ancient east and west.

It was a cosmopolitan city, filled up with all sorts and conditions of men. Every circumstance tended to make it as much a city of vice and licentiousness as it was a center of luxury and extravagance.

Unfortunately it succumbed to these circumstances, and the city in which the disciples were first called Christians had such an evil reputation that when Romans would be upon an outbreak of immorality at Rome they were accustomed to say that "the Orontes had overflowed the Tiber."

Yet here in this evil environment Christianity took root and grew. Here it found its distinctive name. And here, likewise, it became symbolic of its essential purpose to establish life and righteousness in place of corruption and unholiness. Christianity has ever symbolized in its outward conquest of its environment its inward power to lift men above evil tendencies and circumstances.

THOUSANDS IN ATTENDANCE AT CHURCH MEET

Church of the Brethren in National Session at Winona.

THE church of the Brethren Conference now in session at Winona Lake, Ind., continues to grow in numbers and interest, there now being upwards of 20,000 delegates, with five auditoriums filled every morning and afternoon with the different meetings.

This religious body still adheres to its fundamental doctrines of simplicity in dress and diet, its belief in world-wide education for peace rather than for war, its strong opposition to the drug habit of any kind, particularly nicotine; its relentless crusade against white slavery, and its constant stress through its hundreds of pulpits and its eight denominational colleges of the present-day needs of a college training for its young people.

All the speakers are presented without titles or pomp, and reveal a plain, simple creed of life and service in their addresses and sermons. Dr. C. C. Ellis, vice president of the Juniata College speaks on the themes of "Humility," "Love," "Stewardship."

Dr. Sherwood Eddy, world-famous as a Y. M. C. A. worker and missionary, author and Christian statesman, outlines his conception of "The Lost Radiance of the Christian Religion."

The Moderator of the conference, Dr. Otto Winger, president of Manchester College, presides now but will be relieved next Tuesday, when the business conference begins at which the writing clerk, and reading clerk, and the moderator are decided upon for the next conference which will likely be in the east. Dr. Winger gives the Sunday evening address at the Tabernacle.

REV. G. L. FARROW of the Victory Memorial Methodist Protestant Church will speak Sunday morning on "The Man Whom Jesus Could Not Keep." At night, "A Mistaken Opinion."

CHILDREN'S DAY will be observed Sunday at the Grace M. E. Church at 10:30 a. m. Sunday. The theme will be "The Garden of the Lord." At night, Dr. Hyde will speak on "The Gospel and the Ordinary."
